Whether you are an old friend of his or a stranger to him, be sure and go to the opera house, Monday night, May 22 to listen to his quaint philosophy and his refreshing New England humor. He comes this year surrounded by a company of twenty actors and musical artists who will add to the joys of the evening by presenting many delightful specialties between the acts. Then there is the great "hayseed" band, this year better than ever, to make your heart beat faster with music such as they only can render. The band will be heard in free concerts on the streets at noon and in the evening immediately before the show begins. Last but not least, don't forget that this is the play in which occurs the great sawmill scene, in which, to the accompaniment of buzzing wheels and humming pulleys, is enacted the great struggles between heroine and villain which ends with her being bound to a log and placed in the path of the deadly saw-wheel to be torn to pieces by its cruel serrated blades. It is the most thrilling climax to an act every devised by any playwright. Be sure and see it.

Monday evening the Majestic theater opened with a trio of girls known as the Masquerades Sisters. The act deals with singing, dancing and musical numbers, in which an attempt to harmonize their voices was ridiculously shattered. Their dancing was weak, owing to the lack of keeping together. Their musical number, costumes and colored light effects enable them to get away with the act.

The musical Reeves, the last of the week, come well recommended. We hope they will be able to gap first place with a good act, giving a good example of high-class vaudeville worth while.

"Uncle Josh Spruceby," the great comedy of New England farm life, comes to the Charlevoix opera house on Monday, May 22. The company numbers twenty in addition to the musical sensation, the

We like to see and hear a man who is proud of his native town.
He is an indispensable citizen, although he may be as poor as a church mouse; but his name should be written in large black letters at the entrance gate of his town as an honor to his memory. We have such with us and they are worth more to the progress of our town than their weight in gold. They know every point of interest and of advantages for miles around; and any stranger falling into their hands will soon learn everything that adds to the honor of our town and will be most favorably impressed. Such persons overlook with true patriotism all shortcomings and magnified with honest citizenship every advantage. Ye grumblers, meditate.

Hubert E. Paddock, son of Hon.
R. W. Paddock, received word last week that he had passed in his examination for admission as cadet at the Naval Academy, and had been accepted as first alternate, the principal being a young man named Watson, of Breckenridge.
This places him in line for appointment next year, subject to the result of a physical examination at Annapolis. This makes it quite certain that Hubert will go to the academy. Associated Press dispatches say: Representative Dodds has had the distinction of having had both his principal and his alternate successful. He is now seeking to have some representative from one of the remaining districts where both principal and alternate failed, nominate Paddock—the eleventh district alternate. The young man is now ready to become a candidate, but there is no appointment for him, the principal having also passed the test.

Secretary James A. VanDus of the state boys' work committee of the Y. M. C. A. of Michigan announces that the second annual Michigan high school students' convention will be held at Hby-O-Went-Ha on Torch Lake June 27 to July 7. There will also be a training camp for scout leaders from July 7 to July 11 and a camp for boys 12 to 17 years old from July 11 to August 22. The feature day of the convention will be the Fourth of July. Governor Osborn is expected to be among other men prominent throughout the country in boys' work who will address the boys. The conference camp is limited to 100 representative high school boys who are 16 years or older. The conference committee includes William H. Gray of Grand Rapids, Eugene C. Foster of Detroit, F. S. Goodrich of Albion, W. H. Tinker of Ann Arbor and J. B. Jarvis of Grand Rapids.

Amusing incidents are bound to happen anywhere, but the one that occurred during the eighth grade examinations at the city hall was the best yet. Mr. Babcock, school commissioner of Emmet county, instructed one young lady, of corpulent dimensions and jovial nature, to write "ten lines of something" in order that he could judge as to her penmanship. The young settled herself to work, but could think of nothing to write about, so she raised her hand and asked for assistance in the matter. Mr. Babcock suggested carelessly that she put down on the paper, "The cat ran under the barn." With great solemnity the young lady went to work, but after scribbling a short time, raised her hand and asked very gravely, and with apparently no intention of censuring him, "Shall I say the cat came back?" Mr. Babcock and a number of students were forced to adjourn to the hall to give vent to their mirth, and the former afterward said: "That girl is a humorist and doesn't know it." —Petoskey News.

Will Hunter, in possession of an old Indian arrow head made of hummered out of copper. This was found in Coldsprings township and is a product of the long lost arts—the tempering of copper. The specimen is badly corroded from age, but shows the original outlines very distinctly. Mr. Hunter is making a collection of curios and has also an axe and hatchet of the same construction. He states that the arrow head will be sent to the Smithsonian Institute at Washington. —Mancelona News.

The free tuition law has been amended by the present legislature and now provides that in order to have his tuition paid a child must possess an eighth grade diploma or shall have evidence of having completed eight grades of work in a graded school district. The state department has, therefore, ruled that all children applying for tuition this year must either possess an eighth grade diploma granted by the county board of examiners or submit proof that he has completed eight grades of work in a graded school district. Of course a child who has had his tuition paid last year under the wording of the old law but who did not possess an eighth grade diploma is entitled to have his tuition paid this year without it.

The greatest revival in its history has just concluded at Fife Lake, says Cadillac Globe. Entire families have been converted, and there is scarcely a home in which some member of the household has not joined in the effort toward leading a better life. People in all walks of life have become penitent and are trying to set a better example. The meetings were conducted under Methodist auspices.

Literary Notes

Why so many songs and poems have been written about dreams is a question that has never been definitely settled, still, every new song on the subject that has literary merit and a pleasing melody meets with public approval. "The Vale of Dreams," a new song by Chas. E. Baer and Johann C. Schmidt is at present very popular in New York and Boston. In fact, it was in Boston that it first attained popularity, by its rendition at a Boston Conservatory concert. A young contralto made her debut and instantly became famous by her rendition of "The Vale of Dreams." It is really a high class ballad and far above the average popular song. The publishers, Jerome H. Remick & Co., have of late years devoted considerable money and energy in trying to raise the standard of popular songs, and "The Garden of Roses," by the same composers, also a high class ballad has actually outsold any of the popular songs in their catalogue.

Musical taste is improving and while the people still love the rollicking songs of the vaudeville stage they welcome the better class of songs in their homes. The first part of "The Vale of Dreams" opens in a minor key, leading up to the refrain in major. Mr. Bert Sheridan of the celebrated Rollians, is singing this song nightly to big applause.

CHOKES
Meet me in the vale-of-dreams, by the summer sea;
There love's star forever gleams, dear.
Gleams for you and gleams for me.
There our hearts will find repose.
Nestle the moon's fair beams.
Meet me there beside the rose.
In the vale of dreams.

Willing to Tell It.
The check which the comely young German woman handed in at the window of a Walnut street savings fund bank the other day was made payable to Gretchen H. Schmidt, and she had endorsed it simply Gretchen Schmidt. The man at the receiving teller's window called her back to rectify the mistake just as she was turning away.
"You don't deposit this quite this way," he explained. "See, you have forgotten the H."
The young woman looked at her check and blushed a rosy red.
"Ach, so I haf," she murmured and wrote hurriedly:
"Age twenty-three." — Philadelphia Times.

Another Romance Spoiled.
At the risk of his life the brave man had rushed into the middle of the snarling street, grasped the bridle of the runaway horse and ended the mad race of the panting animal. Then he modestly smiled at the erstwhile fainting lady who occupied the buggy.
"Say, you grinning idiot," snapped the lady, "what did you butt in like that for?"
"Why—er—you see," stammered the hero, "wasn't your horse running away?"
"Back to backville for yours?" retorted the angry dame. "Why, you rap, there was a moving picture camera trained on this outfit, and now you've ruined an expensive film!" — Detroit Free Press.

Farm and Garden

WATER AS A CROP.

Good Trades in Bottle Product Possible in Many Localities.

Water as a crop has not received the attention from farmers which it deserves, according to experts who have investigated the matter. In their opinion there are many districts in this country in which profitable trades in bottled water could be worked up at little cost to the farmers, provided, of course, they have never failing springs of pure water from which to supply the demand.

A great many cities are complaining of the inferior quality of the water furnished by the city waterworks, and the cooling of the "water wagon" laden with bottles the contents of which would be guaranteed pure and wholesome by chemical analysis would be a welcome sight. A recent case in which a good business in bottled water has been established is that of a farm.

BOTTLE HOUSE FOR SPRING WATER.

or living within easy hauling distance of a small Pennsylvania city. The city is supplied with water from the Susquehanna river, which at this point is polluted by sewage and other offensive material. Although the water is filtered by the city many persons consider it not fit to drink. The farmer has a spring of beautifully clear, pure water. He bottles it and conveys it in crates to the city, many of the people of which are glad to pay the moderate price asked for the water. The trade is profitable to the owner of the spring, although he has gone to the expense of putting in a pump to draw the water into the house where the bottles are filled and a sterilizer for washing the bottles. The spring itself is walled, boxed and guaranteed dirt proof. The picture shows one view of the house in which the water is bottled.

The nights are long, and this is a good time to call the members of the family and hired hands together after the evening meal and discuss the plans for the year.

The Profitable Cow.

A cow must produce about 4,000 pounds of milk and 100 pounds of butter fat to pay for her feed and labor. This is the deal line: 5,000 pounds milk, $10 profit; 8,000 pounds milk, $40 profit—four times as much. Ten cows averaging 8,000 pounds of milk are as profitable as forty cows producing 5,000 pounds. The cost of keep increases but $35 per cow, from 2,000 to 10,000 pounds of milk given, yet the income increases $115, or over three times as rapidly. —Professor W. J. Fraser, University of Illinois.

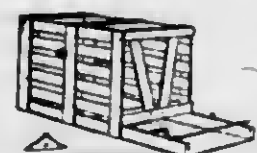

Ant Traps Are the Latest.

Trapping ants is a new method of elimination of insect pests which the department of agriculture experts are watching. In Louisiana and California the Argentine ant, the most persistent ever known by the biologists of the government, has been damaging horticulture by carrying scale insects from infested to uninfested trees and in other ways, and all anti-ant campaigns have so far failed as to this species.

Your wife is your partner, and when you buy a new farm implement to lighten your labor or enable you to produce better results you should always do as much for her and her work. If you can't do both, look after the partner first.

Dehorning Chute.

Chutes like the one shown in this cut, taken from Farm and Fireside, can be constructed of two inch lumber throughout, excepting for the two upper pieces on the sides, which are 1 by 12. A stanchion is provided at the front end with a hook, plus at bottom, which can be removed quickly and the animal driven out in front if desired. After the animal is fastened into stanchion a rope run around its neck and nose is fastened to the wall and drawn tight. Bolts should be used throughout and clips on the crosspieces to insure strength.

THE BROODER NURSERY.

The nursery is really the whole brooder, for, while the other half, the sun parlor, is the peep's playground, the nursery does the nature take stunt of playing mammy hen. This is done with the hover, which in the picture is heated from a lamp box outside.

Some are heated with hot water or steam. We wish to emphasize the importance of the hover and heating apparatus in artificial brooding, for so many get out a nice bunch of chicks, then lose them in faulty hovers. You will note this nursery opens in front, the door being mostly glass to give good light, a board under the door being removable for cleaning the all level floor. The sun parlor also has a large sash, thus making the whole interior light, the chicks and thermometer being always in sight.

The hover is a dandy. It is twenty-two inches in diameter, ten inches high and is all clear space beneath. It has no hot drum against which chicks crowd and get scorched and crushed; no soot and lamp fumes come up into the hover to smother; no hot floor shrivels up the chicks' legs and make them cripples.

The heat is overhead and radiates down as in nature. It enters from a lamp box outside, circulates through a doughnut shaped radiator in top of hover, and all lamp fumes are returned to the outside, so that this element, so deadly to chicks, is entirely absent. The hover ventilator is on top in the center, and with a regulator attached there is little difficulty to preserve an even temperature even in zero weather. The nursery should be kept scrupulously clean. The hover should be cleaned every day, for if chicks are compelled to breathe foul air in this sleeping apartment they are soon killed or stunted.

For a good deodorizer, a dropping drier and a soft bedding we use dry sandy loam on our brooder floors and find it the best ever.

FEATHERS AND EGGSHELLS.

Nathan F. Yost of Keeler's Church, Bucks county, Pa., captured twenty-eight live skunks in one night. Bucks county fanciers should give Mr. Yost a prize silver cup for protecting their roosters and nominate him for a Carnegie medal.

One thousand five hundred turkeys were bought up, dressed and shipped to the Thanksgiving market at New York by a single Pennsylvania dealer. Seven hundred were dressed in one day.

When a poultry association or agricultural society contracts with a party to care for the poultry exhibits the matter of experience as well as price should be considered. The treatment fowls get at some exhibitions is shameful, and the guilty party should be pulled for cruelty to animals.

Smokes are a great pest to poultry in Florida, being experts at gathering eggs and gobbling chicks. Hogs are kept in the yards to catch the reptiles.

Hens seldom get hard crop from swallowing straw on the scratching floor unless they are nearly starved and feed is thrown in the litter. They grab grain and straw together, and so much straw coils and blocks way to the gizzard.

By jolting of the wagon six dozen eggs were broken for a farmer attending the Danville (Pa.) market. He tried to sell them for 5 cents less than market price, but failed. In sight of his stand was a store where a neat, safe crate holding ten dozen eggs was for sale for only 25 cents.

In the rainy season ants are a specially good feed, as their husks are a deterrent to diarrhea. White wheat will give pigeons scours and often nets this way with chickens.

A Texas fancier who started to raise goats as a side issue declares they beat a bulldog barking—fruit trees. Why not use the butters to throw midnight neck wringers?

The pictures of roosters and hens, geese gobblers and quacks in the revised "Standard of Perfection" cost $15 to $50 each, according to color. Twenty-five thousand copies were ordered printed by the St. Louis convention and are now on sale.

Keep your weather eye on the hog without a sportsy curl in his tail. He will come to a bad end. Watch that rooster whose tail gets out of plumb or hangs in a don't care style. He is covered with ewers or has a kink in his constitution.

Where a good number of fowls are kept there should be a place to store feed. The bins should be lined so mice cannot gnaw into them, and the building should be clear underneath so rats cannot harbor. Teach the cat to sleep in the feed house and she'll catch every mouse.

FOR BOOSTING COUNTIES

Supervisor Can Levy Tax Not to Exceed Two Thousand Dollars

The Foster bill which was passed by the recent legislature authorizes the board of supervisors of the counties of the state to levy a special tax for the purpose of advertising the agricultural advantages of the county or for displaying the products and industries of the county at domestic or foreign exhibitions, for the purpose of encouraging immigration and increasing trade in the products of the state.

The provisions of the bill are as follows:

Section 1. The boards of supervisors of the several counties within the state of Michigan, or any of them, are hereby authorized and empowered to levy a special tax on taxable property within their respective counties, for the purpose of creating a fund not exceeding two thousand dollars in any one year in any one county, to be used in advertising the agricultural advantages of the county or for collecting, preparing and maintaining an exhibition of the products and industries of the county at any domestic or foreign exposition, for the purpose of encouraging immigration and increasing trade in the products of the state of Michigan. Provided, that the total tax levied for that purpose in any one year shall not exceed five cents on each one hundred dollars of taxable property in the county, according to the assessment rolls, the sum so raised to be supervised as directed by the board of supervisors of the county.

REGARDLESS OF WEATHER CONDITIONS

and bring from 50 to 75 cents per bushel on the outside markets and also get to their destination in good condition. There are lots better than peach and for canning, but no better shippers.

So much has been said about the shipping of peaches, but there will be no trouble if we can grow large enough quantities, as the railroad people will take care of us.

You can pick a car of peaches while you are thinking about a car of cherries, and are not taking any chances. A peach tree will stand a whole lot more cold than any body thinks. The mercury went 30 below in 1910 and that year we had a fair crop of peaches. The freezing of trees depends on the condition of the tree and how they go into their winter quarters. It all depends on the one that handles the orchards to see that his trees are in condition and the care they receive through the spring and summer. Good tillage and feeding will produce good growth and vigorous buds. On peaches stop stirring the soil after the first of August and give the wood a chance to harden.

As to our location, it cannot be excelled for all kinds of fruit. We had a good crop of fruit the year we had a foot of snow on the 13th of May, when the trees were all in full bloom. I had a fine crop of apples.

My bearing apple trees for 1910 numbered 175, ranging all the way from 10 to 50 years old. The 50 year old trees were only six in number. This is the number of trees I received $2000 for the crop in 1910. I had one Alexander tree bearing 12 barrels selling at $12.00, and also I had several Duchess and Greenings bearing 12 barrels, one Baldwin tree in 1910 giving 13 barrels and one Fallowater in 1908, 15 barrels.

We are figuring on raising the finest crop of apples in the state in 1911.

THE FARROWING SOW.

Warm Pen Necessary to Handle the Early Litters.

If the sow has been properly fed and handled during pregnancy very little attention will be required at farrowing unless the weather should be severe. Each sow should be placed in a pen by herself three or four days before due. For the early litter a warm pen is necessary. It should be dry and supplied with a small amount of straw or chaff. Too much bedding is dangerous, as the pigs are much more apt to be lain on by the sow. A guard rail should be placed eight inches out from the floor and six or eight inches out from the wall as a further means of safety to the pigs.

The attendant can easily tell when a sow is about to farrow by the milk appearing in her teats a few hours in advance. In cold weather it may be necessary to dry and warm the pigs by artificial heat. A heated oil lamp with some hot bricks or stones wrapped in blankets is excellent for this purpose. The pigs may be placed in the warm box or barrel and when thoroughly dry and warm put back with the sow to suckle. Sometimes it happens that a sow will be too cross and nervous to submit to having the pigs removed in this way. The man who has made friends with his sows previously will commonly have little difficulty in working about them at this time.

Possibly some may not be aware of the fact that a newly farrowed pig will very seldom smother if picked up by the tail or ear. Many pigs are lost mainly through carelessness at farrowing time, probably more than by over-attention at this time, although too much solicitude may result in harm. The sow should be kept as quiet as possible the first twenty-four hours, receiving nothing but water, which should be warmed, especially if the weather is at all cold. The feeding for three or four days should be light, a warm bran slop being given at first, gradually working up to a full feed at the end of a week or ten days.

GOOD QUALITIES OF RED POLLED CATTLE

As early as the year 1778 in the county of Norfolk and Suffolk, England, there were whole herds of Red Polled cattle. The breed was then universally called—that is, without horns—and it about that time a number of men farming in these counties whose farms were near together cooperated to improve their Red Polls by careful selection, writes P. G. Henderson in the Breeder's Gazette.

The year 1806 may be taken as the date from which the Norfolk and Suffolk Red Polls merged into each other, and it was at this time that the East Norfolk Agricultural association established classes for Norfolk Polled cattle.

The first importation of these red and hornless milk and meat producers was made to the United States in 1875, consisting of one bull and three cows. The date of their introduction to the United States in any considerable numbers, however, can be placed at about twenty-five years ago. At that time these cattle were introduced from the first appearance before the American public.

The introduction into the field of animal husbandry in America of a breed of cattle purporting to be of English blood was naturally greeted by the advocates of special purpose cattle of both beef and milk type. Subsequently, then, if the Red Polls have won their way to any marked degree of popularity they must have done it in the face of the most severe criticism. While the breeders of strictly beef or dairy cattle freely concede a place for the other, they do not concede a middle ground and have persistently con-

Red Polled cattle, as their name indicates, are red in color and hornless. They originated in England and are considered good beef and milk producers. This breed is noted for hardness of constitution, enabling them to thrive on scanty pasture and without the severe winters and cold springs of the eastern counties of England.

lated the reality of the bovine animal whose qualities were a combination of the two.

In spite of this antagonistic force Red Polls have rapidly spread through the United States. They are now favorites upon hundreds of farms in nearly every state in the Union. This would have been impossible had they not possessed in an eminent degree the qualities of a farmer's cow—a cow that can under such herself in the dairy and her progeny in the feed lot. The field open for such a cow is practically unlimited in the great corn producing states, where feed is so abundant and comparatively cheap. The cow that can yield a profit from butter fat sold to the creamery and whose calf, if hand fed and intelligently raised with the skill now so easily acquired, will sell to the feeder at a profit is the farmer's cow.

Corn as a Horse Feed.

The corn kernel for horses is very well worth while under certain circumstances. This is ordinarily fed in the form of cracked corn. For animals at hard work a considerable share of the ration may be this made up. Corn is not adapted to heavy or trotting horses, for its fattening qualities are such as to inhibit their active exercises. For show, heavy work, however, if not fed in moderate quantities, it is well worth while, particularly in winter. Professor J. L. Ellis, Vermont Experiment Station.

Sunlight in the Stables.

Is your row stable a modern one, with a lot of windows in it, or is it an old fashioned one with a sliding board for a window? If the latter, arrange some way to get some windows and let into it. The health of your animals depends on it. Besides, the light makes it so much more agreeable for the owner or attendant to work in, and there is no question but that the cows will do much better and be better off every way in a well lighted stable.

Vegetable Fancy Work.

Little Mrs. Heble had almost everything to learn about housekeeping, but she was so enthusiastic in her interest that every one was glad to help her. "I have some particularly fine aspirin," the marketman told her one day, and he displayed a bunch for her admiration. "Picked out three hours ago," he added.

MICHIGAN'S BEET SUGAR INDUSTRY

Benefits Resulting From Its Introduction in the State

BANK ACCOUNTS HAVE BEEN CREATED

Farm Mortgages Have Been Paid and Land Values Raised

The benefits resulting from the introduction of the beet sugar industry in the state of Michigan are enthusiastically commented upon in the following, from the Detroit Times of April 15, 1911:

When one reads that the sugar factories in Michigan have, this season, sliced 1,150,000 tons of beets, for which they have paid the farmers over $7,000,000.00, and have produced from these beets from 200,000,000 to 270,000,000 pounds of sugar the figures convey very little meaning. The average person fails to grasp the significance of such figures. If we were to translate these statistics into those that one can more readily grasp, we might say that, if these beets, used by the factories of Michigan in making sugar the past season, were loaded in freight cars, with the minimum load of twenty tons to the car, they would make a solid train load of beets 513 miles in length, or nearly double the distance from Detroit to Chicago. If the money paid the farmers for these beets was changed into dollar bills and these placed end to end they would cover, continuously, the four rails of a double track railroad from Detroit to Bay City, and the two rails of a single track railroad from Bay City to Mackinaw; or to use another illustration, the money paid Michigan farmers, this season, for beets would carpet a twenty-five acre field with one dollar bills.

If the coal, used this season in the sugar factories of Michigan, was loaded in cars, with thirty tons to a car, it would make a continuous train load of coal reaching from Detroit to Jackson.

If the sugar made from these beets was loaded in box cars, with thirty thousand pounds to the car, it would make a continuous train load of sugar eighty-five miles in length, or if packed in barrels, and these barrels placed end to end, it would make a row of barrels reaching from Grand Rapids to Detroit and from Detroit to Bay City, and from Bay City to Mackinaw. The value of this sugar delivered in the cities in which it is marketed is $1,500,000.00 greater than the combined capital of all the banks in the city of Detroit.

Such are the figures with reference to this season's output of beet sugar in Michigan. Judging from the acreage already contracted for next season, next fall's crop will greatly surpass last season's output. When one considers that this entire business has been developed in Michigan within the past ten years, he begins to comprehend the importance of this industry to the state. If a man is a benefactor, who makes two blades of grass grow where one grew before, certainly those men who, in a single decade, have created an agricultural and manufacturing industry, which adds $13,000,000.00 a year to the resources of the state, have reason to feel proud of the results of their efforts.

Throughout the beet districts of the state, farm mortgages have been paid; farm buildings have been erected; bank accounts have been created; land values increased; business conditions improved, and general prosperity enhanced by this industry. No one has been crippled, every citizen of the state whether he raises beets or lives in the city, has been benefited by virtue of securing his sugar at a lower price than he would have obtained if had not this industry been established in Michigan. The freight bills paid by the Michigan sugar factories to the railroad companies this season, approximate $300,000. Collections throughout the beet districts, in every line of mercantile pursuit have been improved by the distribution of this vast amount of ready money within the borders of the state. Aside from paying their full share of local and state taxes, the beet sugar factories of Michigan have been furnishing enough monies to a chemical company, located at Bay City, to produce alcohol for the arts and sciences, which pays into the national treasury $2,000,000 a year in internal revenue tax.

From every factory good gravel and stone turnpikes have been built radiating into the country, until in the sugar beet districts, we now have the best highways found in the state.

Not least among the benefits derived from the industry, is the indirect influence it exerts upon every other agricultural crop. Instead of improvising the soil, beets improve its fertility. The system of rotation, adopted by good beet farmers, has resulted in increasing the yield of oats, wheat, beans, potatoes, corn and clover per acre. The land near the beet sugar factories, which ten years ago could be purchased for $50 per acre now brings from $125 to $150 per acre, and the rental values have been increased proportionally.

WORK OF THE BOARD OF REVIEW

City of Charlevoix Raised Over Thirty-five Per Cent

TOTAL ASSESSED VALUATION $1,653,890

Heaviest Increase Fell Upon the Resort Property.

Which Was Raised $44,845, an Increase of Thirty-six and Two-thirds Per Cent—Other Valuations Raised.

Considerable comment has been caused by reason of the assessed valuation of the city of Charlevoix having been raised by the assessor and the board of review which was in session all of last week. It is probably not generally known that the state tax commission had informed the assessing officers of Charlevoix county that the county should be raised in valuation from fifty to sixty per cent in order to compare with other counties in the state, and that soon after the spring election and the appointment of the various assessing officers of the city of Charlevoix, city of Boyne and East Jordan, a meeting was held at East Jordan, at which meeting were present the mayor and assessor of each of the three towns, and at this meeting it was decided that each one of the three towns in the county would raise their assessed valuation anywhere from forty to fifty per cent and it was generally understood that the townships would do the same.

Some of the supervisors in the townships are raising their valuations along the same lines which were followed in the city of Charlevoix. The assessing officers of Charlevoix did not consider it fair or advisable to raise every piece of property just forty per cent, as some descriptions were assessed higher in proportion than others but on the whole the entire city should be raised materially, and this was done, trusting and believing that the assessing officers and the boards of review of the other two towns would do the same thing.

After the assessment was reviewed by the board of review, and the final computation made, it was found that the total assessed valuation of the city of Charlevoix was $1,653,890, which was slightly in excess of the valuation placed thereon by the assessor, and was $431,003 more than the assessed valuation for 1910, a thirty-five and one-fifth per cent raise.

The heaviest increase in valuation fell upon the resort property and upon Michigan avenue, Dixon avenue, Park avenue and Bridge street. The property owned by the three resorts known as the Central Land company, Chicago Summer Resort and Charlevoix Summer Home Association was raised $41,845, an increase of thirty-six and two-thirds per cent. The property on Michigan, Dixon and Park avenues was increased a higher rate of per cent. The property known as the Crozier addition was raised one hundred per cent, being assessed

MEMORIAL DAY PROCLAMATION

Governor Osborn has issued the following proclamation, calling upon the people of the state to observe Memorial Day on May 30:

"The custom of observing a day once a year for the purpose of especially paying tributes of memory to those who so bravely gave their lives that the nation might live and be a purer and better home for the oppressed of all lands, is one of the most commendable of our national life. Greater love hath no man than this that a man lay down his life for his friends."

"The legions that lie buried in Mother Earth, very many of them in unmarked graves, will never be forgotten. Their sacrifice will be forever an inspiration to higher citizenship upon the part of those who live today and tomorrow; in order that we may so guide the state that it will be worthy of the hallowed dead who died for it."

"Then let us gather throughout all Michigan and strew flowers on land and water in honor of the heroes of the army and navy who are gone but not forgotten. And let us consecrate ourselves anew to the service of God and our country, so that the search of the living may be always upward to better things, higher motives and truer ideas. A grateful people makes a gracious land."

"Therefore, I, Chase S. Osborn, governor of the commonwealth of Michigan, do hereby issue, this my proclamation, and earnestly urge the observance of Tuesday, May 30, 1911, as Decoration and Memorial day."

ed at $15,000, and the adjoining property was assessed anywhere from fifty to seventy-six per cent increase. The property known as the LeFevre cottage and owned by Lisle Shanahan, was raised fifty per cent. Mayor Hamilton's was increased from $1,700 to $3,000 an increase of seventy-five per cent. Alderman Swinton's property was increased over fifty per cent, and so on for the entire property along Michigan and Dixon avenues.

The property on the west end of Park avenue was raised materially. The property owned by Mr. Jackson known as the McKinnon house was increased over one hundred per cent. Mr. Crane's property was increased a trifle under sixty per cent. Alderman Rachev's property was increased some seventy-five per cent, it being the intention of the board of review to assess all property on an equal basis.

The attention of the board of review was called to a great many discrepancies, which the board attempted to revise. However the revision was generally upward. The property on Bridge street was increased as near as possible about forty per cent. Most of the increase being according to frontage.

Should the entire county increase their valuation in proportion to the increase in the City of Charlevoix, and we believe the balance of the county should be increased more than the City of Charlevoix in order to equalize them, the taxes would not be any higher, unless it might be for local taxation.

The officials of the city understand that it is not the intention of the other two towns in the county to raise their valuation, although they each agreed to do so. The officials of the City of Charlevoix had a certain degree of faith in the words of the officials of the other towns and believed they would do what they promised, to do, and therefore lived up to the letter of their agreement. From what has already been learned, there is no doubt but that the state tax commissioners will be invited to visit the county of Charlevoix, and that their attention will be called to all discrepancies between the value put upon the valuations of the property in Charlevoix and in other parts of the county, and we are confident that when the tax commission has left the county, each and every precinct in Charlevoix county will have been equalized honestly and fairly as compared with the assessed valuation of the City of Charlevoix.

Below is tabulated form will be found the wards of the City of Charlevoix as assessed for 1911.

First ward.....	$ 484 850
Second ward.....	389 475
Third ward.....	143 150
.....	$1 327 475
Personal tax.....	326 415
Total.....	$1 653 890
Real Estate, 1910.....	$ 969 675
Personal, 1910.....	253 180
.....	$1 222 855

Making a total raise in valuation in real estate for 1911 of $357,500, and on personal property, $73,235. Below will be found the 1910 assessment of the three resorts, also the assessment as fixed by the board of review for 1911:

Central land	1910	1911	Raise
Company..	$ 74,350	$ 84,705	$10,445
Chicago Club	43,000	60,000	17,000
Charlevoix Summer Home Assn.	114,000	171,400	57,400

This makes a total raise on the above resort property of $84,745, a percentage of thirty-six and two-thirds.

BIG FRUIT CROP

Hilldale Mas Will Locate in Eveline Township.

John P. Suler of Hilldale, Mich., bought the 160-acre farm from Thomas Clark of Eveline township and will plant the place to fruit. Mr. Suler has recently taken a course in fruit raising at the Michigan Agricultural college and understands the business thoroughly.

Death Toll is 3,332.

There were 3,332 deaths in Michigan during April, according to the monthly mortality statement issued today by Secretary of State Martindale. The number of births was 4,754. The figures show a decrease of 422 in the number of deaths as compared with March, and 440 less births. Among the principal causes of death were tuberculosis of the lungs, which caused 220; other forms of tuberculosis, 41; typhoid fever, 44; diphtheria, 35; scarlet fever, 25; measles, 31; pneumonia, 324; meningitis, 99.

MORTGAGE TAX LAW

Many Being Placed Under the Provisions of the New Law.

Attorney General Kuhn has rendered an opinion relative to the new mortgage tax law, in which he points out the methods by which the owners of mortgages in force at the time the act goes into effect, August 22, 1911, may bring those securities under its provisions.

He states that mortgages on file at that time may be presented to county treasurers in the counties in which the property covered is located and the tax of one-half of 1 per cent paid, and then those mortgages will be considered the same as new mortgages filed after January 1, 1911, on which a filing tax of 50 cents per $100 is required. It is pointed out that the new law does not exempt mortgages now in force from the tax of this year and those on which the filing fee provided in the new act is not paid, as set forth, will continue under the ad valorem system of taxation.

It is the general opinion of state officers that practically every mortgage in the state will be placed under the provisions of the new law.

WORK SHOWS GOOD RESULTS

Development Bureau is Rapidly Growing in Popularity

HAVE NEW OFFICERS AND DIRECTORS

County Clerk D. S. Payton Elected as Vice-President

Secretary Gibson Gave Interesting Report—Finances in Satisfactory Condition.

The annual directors meeting of the Western Michigan Development bureau was held in Traverse City Wednesday afternoon with a good representation of the directors from the twenty counties and transportation companies present. Those in attendance from this county Ford P. Robbins of Boyne Falls and D. S. Payton of Charlevoix.

Secretary Gibson gave a report of the work that has been done in the past year, and in his remarks stated that nearly all development movements depend largely for their success upon what they can do to influence people outside of their home territory. While he believed that outside exploitation and development is important, yet results have demonstrated that development from within is vastly important. Believing, as we do, that agriculture is our greatest and most important industry and that in it lies the base of all human endeavors, and that in the soil, the origin of all things, lies the solution of many difficulties, we hold that to encourage co-operation between the city and the county and to educate our own people in better methods of agriculture and horticulture, and to a point where they will know for themselves the advantages possessed by western Michigan, so that they will become enthusiastic, will welcome newcomers and hold out to them the helping hand, is the most valuable and useful work in which we can be engaged. To this end he has traveled approximately 27,000 miles by rail and 400 by automobile and carriage, and has visited over seventy-five different places in the bureau's territory during the past year.

Owing to the wide-spread demand created for information, the bureau has been able to get a number of articles published in the leading state papers gratis, which if paid for at regular rates, would amount to over $4,000. New settlers are coming in throughout the entire territory as a result of the wide publicity, in several instances coming from as far west as Wyoming and Montana. While there is no means of ascertaining definitely how many settlers have come to western Michigan as a result of the work done, we know in a general

MICHIGAN'S NEW FIRE MARSHAL LAW

One of the Most Important Laws Recently Passed

IT WILL TAKE IMMEDIATE EFFECT

Law Should Greatly Reduce Fire Waste of State

Requires Fire Drills in Schools and Gives Protection to Lives and Property Throughout the State.

One of the most important and valuable laws passed by the recent session of the Michigan legislature was that creating a fire marshal department, which was regarded as of such importance that it was made to take immediate effect. The department should greatly reduce the fire waste of the state, and thus should pave the way for a reduction of fire insurance rates, which are based on the loss ratio. In addition to this advantage, it should protect lives and property of the citizens by reducing the conflagration hazard, securing the removal of fire traps and other dangerous conditions, and requiring fire drills in the schools, etc. These changes are secured without any cost to the public, since the expense of the department is defrayed from insurance taxes already levied upon the companies, over and above the amount needed for the support of the insurance department.

The law will not be published in due official course for several months, but since it is already in effect and it is of such great importance, a summary of its provisions will be of interest. It makes the commissioner of insurance state fire marshal, and the deputy commissioner of insurance deputy state fire marshal, the marshal to appoint an assistant who shall be in special charge of the details of the work. The marshal may also appoint as state inspector any person known to him to be competent and skilled in the inspection of buildings and their contents, who shall be duly commissioned and serve without compensation. This will enable the marshal to enlist in his service the inspectors and field men of the fire insurance companies, the results of their inspection to be reported to the fire marshal for action.

The chief of the fire department in every city and village maintaining a department, and the president of each incorporated village or town in which no department exists, must report within two days not including Sunday, to the state fire marshal, every fire which destroys or damages property. All insurance companies doing business in the state are also required to report to the fire marshal all losses reported to them. The fire marshal has the right to conduct investigations under oath, and to cause the arrest of persons regarded as guilty of starting fires, and he with his deputies and assistants, has the power, in any county to summon and compel the attendance of witnesses in such inquiries, and to enter upon and examine any premises in which fires have occurred.

In addition to these provisions, making possible the investigation of crooked fires, which in other states have greatly reduced the number of such fires, the law has important features intended to prevent fires. The officials of the department and chiefs of fire departments, the mayors of cities and villages, and the clerks of townships are given the right, at all reasonable hours, to enter buildings and premises within their jurisdiction, for the purpose of examination. Whenever they find any buildings especially liable to fire, for want of proper repair, age, or any cause, and so situated as to endanger other buildings or property, they can require the condition remedied. The fire marshal is also authorized to make regulations for the storage, sale and transportation of highly inflammable materials and explosives. Failure to comply with the

A bunch of young folks walked over to Marion last Friday night to the social. Enjoyed it very much.

Fannie and John Knudson and their friend Peter Larson visited Robert Knudson at East Jordan, May 14.

OF and OFF.

The grammatical use of the English "of" and "off" proves to be a stumbling block to the average foreign element.

Here's the paper you bought off me. It is a usual expression of the newsboy, but it was a little startling for a woman of more than necessary composure to be summoned to the back door to hear, "Here's the hard Mrs. Blank borrowed off of you."

More startling was the grief-stricken retort when the master, after vainly trying to dissect the steak, angrily demanded, "Where in blazes did you get this steak, anyway?" "Why, I got it off of William!"—New York Tribune.

Made Dumas Retract.

The elder Dumas was once sued for satirizing in one of his novels, "La Route de Varennes," that the capture of Louis XVI, and Marie Antoinette at Varennes by the revolutionaries was due to the action of the Chevalier de Prefontaine in shutting the door of his house on the fugitives.

A grandson of the chevalier considered this an aspersion on his ancestor's chivalry and proved in court that the statement was untrue. An order was issued compelling Dumas' publisher to call to all copies of the novel and to issue within one month a fresh edition with a note that the Chevalier de Prefontaine placed his house at the disposal of the royal fugitives.

CURE YOUR KIDNEYS

No Need to Take Any Further Risks.

Why will people continue to suffer the agonies of kidney complaint, backache, urinary disorders, lameness, headache, fainting, why allow themselves to become chronic invalids, when a certain cure is offered them?

Doan's Kidney Pills is the remedy to use, because it gives to the kidneys help they need to perform their work.

If you have any, even one, of the symptoms of kidney diseases, cure yourself now, before diabetes, dropsy, or Bright's disease sets in. Can Charlevoix residents demand more convincing proof than the following:

Everett W. Davis, Maple St., Manicoma, Mich., says: "I consider Doan's Kidney Pills to be a valuable kidney remedy. My back pained me severely and I had other symptoms of kidney complaint. Some time ago I obtained a box of Doan's Kidney Pills and it did not take them long to relieve my aches and pains. I have no hesitation whatever in giving Doan's Kidney Pills my endorsement."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, New York, sole agents for the United States.

Remember the name—Doan's—and take no other.

Literary Notes

The June Woman's Home Companion is interesting and useful in a great variety of ways. One of its special features, particularly valuable and entertaining at the present time is a description of a large number of "safe and sane" celebrations of the Fourth of July which actually took place last year. These reports are full of ideas and suggestions which, as fast as they are put into effect, will save legs, arms and lives. And the great point is that the children who enjoy these celebrations had a better time than they had in the old way. The new forms of entertainment that have been devised, and that are reported in this month's Companion, are really amazing in extent and ingenuity.

There are six other special articles in the number. One of these are on "The Etiquette of Weddings." Another is on infant mortality. All of the articles are full of practical suggestions. One very interesting article is called "My Happiest Vacation."

The fiction in this month's Companion is notable. There is a splendid story by Elizabeth Stuart Phelps, the last piece of work written by this famous author shortly before her death a few months ago. Other stories are contributed by Marion Hill, C. N. and A. M. Williamson, Zora Gale, Fannie Henshaw Lea and others.

The special departments in the magazine, now numbering eleven, added to the great fashion and household sections, which particularly distinguish the Woman's Home Companion, complete the number for June. All of the famous contributors to these household and fashion departments—Grace M. Gould, Margaret E. Sangster, Fannie Merritt Farmer, Evelyn Parsons and Kate V. Saint-Maur—are represented.

CHAPTER V.
THE next morning I went out for a walk. I lingered a moment outside Sam Graham's old and much neglected drug store, thinking of the change that had come over it since the death of Margaret Graham. Betty's mother, for, despite its out of the way location, the shop had not always been unprofitable. While Margaret lived (my heart still ached with the memory of her name) Sam's business had prospered. She had been one of those women who can rise to any emergency in the interest of her loved ones. The first to realize Sam's improvidence and lack of executive ability, she had taken hold of the business with a firm hand and made it pay—while she lived.

During Margaret's regime, as I say, the shop had thrived. Sam had few ill wishes in Radville. The trade came his way. Then Betty was born, and Margaret died.

Most of this I have on hearsay. I left Radville shortly after their marriage and did not return until some months after Margaret's burial. By that time the shop had begun to show signs of neglect. Its stock was decimated, its trade likewise. Sam was struggling with his inventions more fiercely than ever—seeking forgetfulness, I always thought. The business was allowed to take care of itself. He had always a serene faith in his tomorrow.

Now, the little shop had been far distanced by the competition of Sothern & Lee. It was twenty years behind the times, as the saying is. Small, darksome, dreary and dingy, it served chiefly as a living room for Sam, his daughter and his cronies as well as for his workshop. He had a bench and a ramshackle lathe in one corner, where you might be sure to find him futtily pottering at almost any hour. He owned the little building—or that portion of it which it was a farce to term the equity above the mortgage—and Betty kept house for him in three rooms above the store.

I pushed the door open and entered. He looked up with his never failing smile of welcome and a wave of his hand.

"Howdy, Homer! Come in. Well, well, I'm glad to see you. Sit down. I think that chair there by the store will hold together under you."

"What are you doing, Sam?" I asked.

"Fixin' up the sody fountain. Meant to get it workin' last month, Homer, but somehow I kind of forgot."

He rubbed away briskly at the single faucet which protruded above the counter, lathering it briskly with a metal polish that smelled to heaven.

"Do much sody trade, Sam?"

He paused, passing his worn old fingers reflectively across a chin snowy with a stubble of neglected beard. "No," he allowed thoughtfully, "not so much as we used to now that Sothern & Lee 've got this newfangled notion of puttin' ice-cream in a nickel glass of sody. Most of the young folks go there now, but still I get a call now and then, and every little bit helps." He rubbed on reflectively for a moment. "Course I'd do more, likely, if I carried a bigger line of flavors."

SAM GRAHAM.

"How many do you carry?"

"One," he admitted—with a sigh, "enough."

While I filled my pipe he continued to rub very industriously.

"Why don't you get more?"

He flashed me one of his pale, genial smiles. "I'm thinkin' of it, Homer, soon's I get some money in—next week, mebbe. There's a man in N' York that mebbe can be interested in one of my inventions. Roland Barnette says. Mebbe he'd be wintin' to put a little money in it. Roland says, and of course if he does I'll be able to stock up considerable."

I sighed covertly for him. He rubbed, humming a tuneless rhythm to himself.

"Roland's got a to, write to him about it."

"What invention?" I asked, incredulous.

Sam put down his bottle of polish and came round the counter, beaming. Nothing pleased him better than an opportunity to exhibit some one of his unnumberable models. "I'll show you, Homer," he volunteered cheerfully, shuffling over to his workbench. He rased a match over its surface and applied the flame to a small gas bracket fixed to the wall. A strong rush of gas extinguished the match, and he turned the flow half off before trying again. This time the vapor caught and settled to a steady brilliant flame as white as and much softer than acetylene.

"I'LL SHOW YOU, HOMER."

"There!" he said in triumph. "What d'ye think of that, Homer?"

"Why," I said, "I didn't know you had an acetylene plant."

"No more have I, Homer."

"But what is that, then?" I demanded.

"It's my invention," he returned proudly. "I've been workin' on it two years. Homer, and only got it goin' yesterday. It's goin' to be a great thing, I tell you."

"But what is it, Sam?"

"It's gas from crude petroleum, Homer. See!" he continued, indicating a tank beneath the bench which seemed to be connected with the bracket by a very simple system of piping, broken by a smaller, cylindrical tank. "Ye put the oil in there—just crude as it comes out of the wells, Homer. It don't need refinin', and it runs through this and down here (or this, where it's vaporized—much the same's they vaporize gasoline for automobile engines, ye know—and then it just naturally flows up to the bracket, and there ye are."

"It's wonderful, Sam," said I, wondering if it really were.

"And the best part of it is the economy, Homer. A gallon will run one jet six weeks, day in and out. And simple to install. I tell ye!"

"Have you got it patented yet?"

"Yes, sirc! Took out patents just as soon as it struck me how simple it 'ud be—more than two years ago. Only, of course, it took time to work it out just right, especially when I had to stop now and then 'cause I needed money for materials. But it's all right now, Homer. It's all right now."

"And you say Roland Barnette's writing to some one in New York about it?"

"Yes, he promised he would. I explained it to Roland, and he seemed real interestin'. He's kind, very kind." I was inclined to doubt this and would probably have said something to that effect had not a shadow crossing the window brought me to my feet in consternation. But before I could do more than rise Colonel Bohun had flung open the door and stamped in. He stopped short at sight of me, misguided by his nearsighted eyes, and singled me out with a threatening wave of his heavy stick.

"Well, air," he snarled, "I've come for my answer. Have you sense enough in your addled pate to understand that, man? I've come for my answer!"

"And may have it, whatever it may be, for all of me," I told him.

His face flushed a deeper red. "Oh, it's only you, is it, Littlejohn? I took you for that fool Graham in this dirty dark hole. Where is he?"

I looked to Graham, and he followed the direction of my gaze to the workbench, where Sam stood with his back to it, his worn hands folded quietly before him. He needed a little whiter than usual, I thought, and perhaps it was only my fancy that made him appear to tremble ever so slightly, for he was quite calm and self-possessed—so much so that I realized for the first time there was another man in Radville besides myself who did not fear old Colonel Bohun.

"I'm here, colonel," he said quietly. "What is it you wish?"

The colonel swung on him, shinking with passion. But he held his tongue until he had mastered himself somewhat, a feat of self-restraint on his part over which I marvel to this day.

"You know well, Graham," he said presently. "You got my letter—the letter I wrote you a week ago."

"Yes," said Sam, with a start of comprehension. "Yes, I got it."

"Then why the devil, man, don't you answer it?"

Sam's apologetic smile sweetened his face. "Why," he said haltingly, "I'm sure I meant no offense; but, you see, I'm a very busy man, I forgot it."

"The devil you forgot it! D'ye expect me to believe that, man?"

"I'm afraid you'll have to."

Bohun was speechless for a moment, stricken dumb by a second seizure of fury. But again he calmed himself.

"Very well, I'll swallow that insolence for the present."

"It wasn't meant as such, I assure—" "Don't interrupt me! D'ye hear? I've come for my answer. Yes, I've come down to that, Graham. If you can't record me the common courtesy of a written reply I've come to hear it from your mouth."

Sam nodded thoughtfully. "Mebbe," he said, "you forget you have failed to record me the common courtesy of any sort of communication whatever for twenty years. Colonel Bohun. Even when my wife, your daughter, died you ignored my message asking you to her funeral."

"Be silent!" screamed the colonel. "Do you think I'm here to bandy words with you, fool? I demand my answer!"

"And as for that," continued Sam as evenly as if he had not been interrupted, "your proposition was so preposterous that it could have come only from you and deserved no answer. But since you want it formally, sir, it's no."

For a moment I feared Bohun would have a stroke. The back of the chair I had just vacated and his stick alone supported him through that dumb, terrible transport. He shook so violently that I looked momentarily to see the chair break beneath him. There was insanity in his eyes. When finally he was able to articulate it was in broken gasps.

"I don't believe it," he stammered. "It's a lie! I don't believe it. It's madness. The girl wouldn't be so mad."

"What is it, father?"

I don't know which of us three was the most startled by that simple question in Betty Graham's voice. Sam, at all events, showed the least surprise. The old colonel wheeled toward the back of the store, his jaw dropping and his eyes protruding as though he were confronted with a ghost—as, in a way, he was. Even I had been struck by that strange, heartrending similarity to her mother's tone, and even I trembled a little to hear that voice, as it seemed, from beyond the grave.

Betty stood at the foot of the staircase. Alarmed by the noise of the colonel's raging, she had stolen down, unheard by any of us. And in that moment I realized as never before that the girl had more of her mother in her than lay in that marvelous reproduction of Margaret Graham's voice. As she walked there one detected in her pose something of her mother's quiet dignity, in her eyes more than a little of Margaret's tragedy. Of Margaret's beauty I saw scant trace, I own, but in those days my eyes were blinded by the signs of overwork and insufficient nourishment that marred her young features, by the hopeless dowdiness of her garments.

Abruptly she moved swiftly to her father's side and slipped her hand into his. "What is it, father?" she repeated, eying Colonel Bohun coldly.

"Why, Betty," he said, tremulous—"why, Betty, your grandfather here has been kind enough to offer to take you and educate you and make a lady of you, and—well we were just talking it over, dear—just talking it over."

"Do you mean that?" she stung at Bohun.

He straightened up and held himself (Continued on page seven)

WE WILL HAVE FRUIT.

Well Kept Orchards All Promise an Abundant Crop

Indications Are Not of Nature to Cause Growers Much Anxiety.

So many reports are afloat in regard to the condition of the fruit crop in this section that many are being led astray as to the real situation. Many of the most prominent growers in the county have been interviewed personally and by telephone, and they all agree that while some damage was done by the recent cold snap the damage on the whole will not amount to much in general. In some of the most exposed locations the fruit was seriously damaged, but on the whole the orchards that have been properly cared for and have sufficient air drainage are in good shape and give promise of an abundant crop this season.

D. F. Meech of the March & Armstrong fruit farm have made a careful examination of their orchards and makes the following report: "I had everything in first class condition. Will have a full crop of sweet cherries, sour cherries and apricots; also a full crop of winter apples. There are also indications that there will be a full crop of plums and pears."

After careful inquiry we find that all kinds of fruit are in good condition with the exception of winter apples in the orchards which were not properly taken care of last year. Many of the growers when they found that there was a crop failure last year neglected to continue to spray their trees with the result that the fungus has got the best of them and blighted the leaves, so that this year the trees did not have the strength to bring forth blossoms. What appears to be blossom buds are only tight rolls of leaves, and when opened no blossoms can be found. In the orchards that were systematically attended to through the season there were promises of a full crop.

Taken from all sides the indications are not of such a nature that growers should not have chills over the fruit prospects for the year. One thing that has been proven for a certainty is the fact that those who intend to raise fruit for profit must adopt the modern methods of culture and keep a vigilant eye upon their trees during all seasons of the year. Fruit raising has become an exact science and the growers who realize and adapt themselves to the new conditions are the ones who are reaping the harvest.

way, that there has been more than a thousand newcomers in the last two years.

The proposed apple show at Grand Rapids was taken up and discussed and was referred to the executive committee with power to act. L. F. Perket, advocated the purchasing of the apples to be used for exhibition purposes the same as was done last year when the fruit proved to be of such a high grade, and won the praise of all who saw it at Chicago, and the other places where exhibits were made. He also corroborated the statement made by the secretary in regard to the winter apple crop. The annual election of officers which was scheduled for this meeting resulted as follows:

President—D. J. Day, Glen Haven.
First vice-president—D. S. Payton, Charlevoix.

Second vice-president—Capt. Austin Harrington, Holland.
Treasurer—B. R. Hendel, Manistee.

President Day addressed the meeting with a few appropriate remarks after his election and said it was a great honor to be associated with a body of men who had for their purpose the development of such a region as western Michigan, and promised to continue the good work in a manner that will bring results.

The report of the treasurer was read and showed the finances of the bureau to be in a satisfactory condition.

The chairman called the attention of the committee to the meeting of the western Michigan Press club which will be held in Cadillac in September and thought that the bureau should unite in making the event a success. All of the members present were of the same idea and arrangements will be made to take active part in the meeting. It is possible that a fruit display will be made at the time and an address given by the president and the illustrated lecture delivered one of the evenings.

At this meeting the members of the executive committee were chosen to serve this year, as follows: D. H. Day, D. S. Payton, B. R. Hendel, L. F. Perket, F. A. Mitchell, H. J. Gray, R. F. Church, Joseph Gerber, A. L. Deuel and E. D. Cole.

The work of C. E. Smith the horticultural expert in the employ of the bureau was reviewed and his efforts were pronounced satisfactory and of great value to the bureau. The people are taking kindly to this method of instruction and already excellent results have been obtained. Orchard demonstrations are one of the practical methods of bringing the pupils in touch with the development idea and will be continued in the future.

ANOTHER PIONEER DEAD

Van R. Newville of Boyne City a Former Rural Mail Carrier.

Van R. Newville, one of the old residents of this county passed away early Tuesday morning, May 16, after an illness of a week or two. Mr. Newville has been indisposed for several months back but nothing serious was thought to be the trouble until a few days ago when pneumonia was developed. The funeral services were in charge of G. A. R. Post and the I. O. O. F. Wednesday, May 17 at 2 o'clock.

Mr. Newville was born in Monroe county, N. Y., in November, 1842. He enlisted in the 1st New York Dragoons in 1862 and served for three years in the war of the rebellion. He was married to Miss Emma Bennett of Angelica, N. Y., in 1857. Five children were born to them, only two of whom are still living.

He came to Charlevoix county in 1885 and settled on a new farm in Wilson township, where he lived until coming to Boyne City about six years ago. He acted as a rural mail carrier until failing health compelled him to give it up and since then he has conducted a store on South Lake street.

He is survived by his wife, two children, Mrs. Geo. Snell of Boyne City and Mrs. C. Dietz, Washington, and also two brothers, R. E. Newville and John A. Newville, both of Boyne City.

He was a prominent member of the G. A. R. Post and the local camp of Odd Fellows.

Messrs. Rachow, Webster, Swinton, Bridge, Gaskin and Hampton left Tuesday morning for Chicago, Grand Rapids and other points in the interest of the Dixon avenue paving.

The common council of the city of Petoskey has appropriated $500 to advertise the city, also $1,500, half the purchase price of the old Hotel Imperial site, which will be converted into a park.

The G. A. R. and W. R. C. will meet in a body and attend the Memorial services at the Methodist church at 10 a. m., Sunday, May 28. All who are able to attend are urged to turn out Sunday morning.

George H. VanPelt of Chicago, and son-in-law, C. B. Gonsay, wife and family of Joliet, arrived in the city Sunday night, and will spend the summer at the VanPelt summer home at Norwood.

A union vesper service will be held at the Congregational church Sunday, May 28, at 5:00, at which time the Charlevoix Choral union will render the sacred cantata, "The Holy City." All are invited.

W. D. Harlow and wife of Chicago, were in the city the latter part of the week. From here they went to Bellaire, where they purchased the printing plant of the Bellaire Independent. The Courier wishes them the greatest success in their new venture.

With twenty-six thousand men out of employment in Milwaukee, where the Socialists control the city government, what becomes of the socialist theory that the government should furnish employment for everybody?

Vernon S. Payton, son of County Clerk Payton, has sold his drug stock and fixtures at East Jordan, and has accepted a position as pharmacist in the Ivy Drug store. He will remove his family to this city in the near future.

Sunday A. L. Hart took a party of Charlevoix people to Boyne City for the day and W. H. Francis took a party of young men over in the afternoon on a pleasure and sight seeing trip in his launch, the Olympic. A good time was reported by all who made the trip in both parties.

Aaron Parker has been engaged to talk at the Men's Bible class at noon Sunday in the basement of the Methodist church. All men are invited to attend. Mr. Parker is a reputable chalk artist and will give an interesting hour's talk to all who will spare that time to this good cause.

The Lansing chief of police has just issued an ultimatum to the young girls of that city to either stay off the streets at night unless accompanied by a proper escort or be arrested and pass the night in the lock-up and part of their future in the reform school.—Ex. How about Charlevoix?

W. F. Gilt and Capt. Peterson of Harbor Springs arrived in the city Friday to fit out the Silver Spray. She will then be taken to Harbor Springs for coal and then will proceed to Manistee and go into dry dock for caulking. She will then go on the ferry run between Harbor Springs and Petoskey.

The farm editor of a certain paper has discovered that by planting onions and potatoes in the same field in alternate rows a big crop can be raised in spite of a drought, because the onions being so strong bring tears to the eyes of the potatoes in such volumes that the roots of the vines are kept always moist.—Ex.

The Baptist, Congregational and Methodist churches of this city have furnished sufficient funds to the National Gideon organization to place a nice copy of the American standard edition of the bible in each guest's room of the Elston hotel and Baker's Inn. The bibles are to be put in the rooms this week.

Miss Alice Wait, assistant librarian has left for Charlevoix where she will help in the arrangement of the new $10,000 Carnegie library just finished there. During the past week, the librarian of Charlevoix has been here to get acquainted with the state library work and Miss Wait accompanied her back and will stay until the work of cataloging and general work is completed.—Traverse City Record-Eagle.

Again has the old adage, "Lightning never strikes twice in the same place," proven false, for last Wednesday, the residence of J. E. Darrah at Charion, was struck and things were shaken up in general, while considerable damage was done, though no one was hurt, and the loss was fully covered by insurance. Twenty-four years ago April 13, lightning struck the house and about the same amount of damage was done.—Petoskey News.

Rollie Lewis reports that while on his return, Saturday, from a southern trip, he met twenty-seven men from Ohio, who were on their way to different sections in this vicinity looking for farm lands for themselves and their sons. And with all the good advertising done by the Western Michigan Development bureau and other private enterprises Charlevoix and its immediate vicinity is still without a booklet of any description, telling of its great resources and valuable fruit lands.

NEW FIRE MARSHAL LAW

orders of the authorities subjects the offender to a penalty of not less than $10 or more than $50 for each day's neglect, but in municipalities having building inspection and fire limit ordinances the law does not affect such local regulations, the jurisdiction of the fire marshals in such cases being concurrent with that of the municipal authorities. The department must require teachers of private and public schools and educational institutions to have one fire drill each month and to keep the doors and exits unlocked during school hours.

Such laws in other states have been most successful in reducing the number of fires and protecting the live and property of citizens. The fire waste in the United States last year was $234,470,850, and present indications are that this amount will be greatly exceeded in 1911. Most of these fires are preventable, and are due to carelessness or criminality, and the Michigan fire marshal law will make it possible for a reduction of the state's proportion of this fire waste.

Neighborhood Notes

Charles W. Boston, writes to a western Michigan editor from Tacona, Washington, under date of April 6, as follows: "Now, my dear people of Michigan, stay where you are. I have been from coast to coast and you are in one of the best states I have ever been in. If you want to buy land, buy at home; farm it and farm it right, and you will get better results than the western farmers. To the working man I wish to say, to stay where you are. These advertisements you read, if rightly worded would say, Come West and Get Stung."

The Bay City Tribune reports that the Kneeland-Bigelow Co. has closed a deal for the purchase from the estate of David Ward, of 30,000 acres in Otsego county, west of the line of the Mackinac division of the Michigan Central railroad. The tract is estimated to contain 25,000,000 feet of mixed lumber, which will be lumbered and shipped to Bay City to be manufactured. This company already owned four 40-acre tracts adjoining the lands just purchased.

The Ward estate has disposed of a considerable amount of the holdings of the estate in that section of the state. During the early spring the Hanson company of Grayling, bought 32 40-acre tracts. A. A. Anderson Co. of Cadillac, brought 4,000 acres; and Douglas & Buckley Co., of Manistee, purchased a large tract and that timber will be taken Manistee.

Some of this timber sold at $200 and $300 an acre. The original holdings of which were located and acquired by the late David Ward, at an early day and when northern Michigan timber lands were accorded little value, consisting of about 110,000 acres, estimated to carry upward of 1,000,000,000 feet of lumber.

The Antrim Chemical company of Manistee has been acquired by the Antrim Iron company of Grand Rapids and it is expected that the purchase will result in a greater economy of operation of the iron company. The chemical plant has been in operation about 20 years and was organized for the manufacture of wood alcohol and acetate of lime. It was one of the properties of the late Joseph Berry of Detroit and his associates.

E. J. Reed, who with Arthur Lincoln purchased the Wallace Clow Farm last fall, was down from Charlevoix and bought $200 worth of fruit trees with him which he will put out on his place. They will also put in 15 acres of strawberry plants or about 200,000 plants in all. The fruit trees consist mostly of sweet cherry, pear and peaches. They will also plant a large plot of blackberries.—Central Lake Torch.

The Canning company received two carloads of boilers and machinery Wednesday, being a part of the new equipment the company is installing this season. The cars in question made a record on time from Chicago, having left there on Tuesday and arrived here on the day following. Manager Gill has a force of about a dozen men at work at present. This force will have to be increased as soon as the new boilers can be placed in position.—Central Lake Torch.

The Buckley Business Booster's association has been organized for the purpose of putting Buckley on the Western Michigan map. The Buckley section of western Michigan includes several thousand acres of hardwood lands and the farmers report unusually big crops.

Highway Commissioner Hayner is just now making a hard fight to save the big bridge across the head of the Arm, and at the same time lengthen the life of the docks north of the bridge that are being threatened by the huge volume of sand being discharged by the Jordan river.

The South Arm Lumber Co., years ago made an island of mill refuse at the mouth of the Jordan, utilizing it as a log dumping ground, having a log canal between the island and their mill yard on the shore, while the main body of the stream emptying south and east of this island was deflected toward the east side of the Arm.

Webster's NEW INTERNATIONAL Dictionary, (G. & C. Merriam Co., Springfield, Mass.) surpasses the old International as much as that book exceeded its predecessor. On the old foundation a new superstructure has been built. The reconstruction has been carried on through many years by a large force of trained workers, under the supervision of Dr. W. T. Harris, former United States Commissioner of Education, and reinforced by many eminent specialists. The definitions have been rearranged and amplified. The number of terms defined has been more than doubled. The etymology, synonyms, pronunciation, have received unparallel scholarly labor. The language of English literature for over seven centuries, the terminology of the arts and sciences, and the every-day speech of street, shop, and household, are presented with fullness and clearness. In size of vocabulary, in richness of general information, and in convenience of consultation, the book sets a new mark in lexicography.

Now Commissioner Hayner is at work trying to divert the current of the Jordan through the old log canal. To accomplish this he is putting in sheet piling; but he finds the Jordan a hard stream to manage, the snaken logs in the bed of the river making anything but a good foundation for any kind of work to hold on.

If the main stream can be thrown into the channel it occupied years ago it will pass under the bridge where the piling has a better foundation to withstand the sand, but there is considerable work to be done before it is an accomplished fact.—Enterprise.

The Best Way to Make Yokes.

The making of yokes is not an insignificant matter. It is often a puzzle even in the sewing room. Theoretically yokes are nothing but a small piece of this material cut into a straight collar and a peplum to cover up the bare space of the neck. Practically they are a nuisance, breaking up all theories, going against all rules and generally harassing those who make and those who wear them.

It is these yokes that have caused all the trouble. How to keep them down, how to make them smooth, how to have them cleaned, are a trilogy of questions that women ask each other whenever they forget them.

Even when only an inch or two of this yoke shows above the neck of the blouse it requires as much harness to keep it down as to keep a horse in the shafts. This harness method is as follows: The yoke is cut to the proper depth with the collar attached. One tape is run from the middle of the front to the waist line and one from the middle of each armhole, front, to the waist, then two down the back, one on each side of the middle and all securely sewed to a tight belt made of broad tape which hooks at the back. This method is advocated as the only successful one by women who have studied the problem.

TIMELY HINTS FOR FARMERS

Keep the Colts Growing.

The colt makes its greatest growth during its first year. This should be kept in mind when planning the feeds for the growing colt. It should be pushed right along and kept growing from the time it is born. Some of the best horsemen feed skim milk to the growing colts as a part of their regular ration. This is hard-dried into their feed when they are at four months old and continued until they are yearlings. At first about two quarts are given and the amount gradually increased until they will receive five or six quarts per day. Sometimes trouble is experienced in teaching the colts to drink skim milk. In this case dampen the oats or ground feed with a little milk to begin with and gradually increase the amount until the colt is fed in the form of a slop composed of grain and milk. By this time a taste will have been acquired by the animal, and no further trouble will be met. If this ration is continued through the winter the colt will invariably come out in fine shape in the spring, and there will be no setback incident to weaning, as is usually experienced.

Ration For a Young Bull.

It is a common practice to let a sire have all the clover hay he will consume and then enough of the oats, corn, bran and oilmeal to keep him in good physical condition. A mixture consisting of 300 pounds of oats, 300 pounds of bran, 200 pounds of corn chop and 50 pounds of oilmeal would go very nicely with the clover hay. We would not feed him enough of the concentrates to get him fat, but just enough to keep him in a good thrifty condition.

Slilage is not considered a very good feed for the sire, but a very small allowance is not objectionable.—Herald's Dairyman.

Handling the Ram in Winter.

The ram should not run with the ewes during the winter. He will worry them, and one hunt might kill a lamb. He should have a box stall, not large, with a good strong yard attached, where he can be out of doors on all fine days.

Never leave him out in a storm so that his fleece will become wet, as it might mean death. Feed him regularly and enough to keep him in good, thrifty condition.

Trees Around the Pasture.

When doing the tree planting do not forget to put a few trees in a corner of the pasture fields if there is such a thing as a fenced pasture on the farm. Protect these a few years, and they will protect the stock for many more.

CARE OF THE SHEEP FLOCK IN WINTER.

Animals Repay Liberal Feeding. Points on Breeding.

Every farmer ought to keep at least fifty sheep on his place. He can get a flock of grade ewes at a comparatively small cost, writes a correspondent of New England Homestead. Then he can buy a full blooded ram to head the flock. The first thing he should do is to pick out some good, strong ewes—of good type that show good wool characteristics. Let the ewes be short legged and of good bone, with wide back and not too long neck. Such will prove the best milkers. When most farmers get a ram they buy any old grade, and in that they make a mistake. Buy the very best ram that is to be found and do not think so much of the price you have to pay. In selecting a ram, get one that is short legged, with good, wide shoulders and back, short neck and a good fleece. Lambs from such selections will more than pay the extra expense the first year.

Farmers do not take as good care of their sheep as they should. Sheep should have a little grain once a day, perhaps one-fourth pound per head. The lambs will be enough better to pay for the grain, and the ewe will shear more wool than she would otherwise. Do not forget to raise a few roots for the sheep. Roots will keep them healthy and in good condition.

Poultry Notes.

Always remember that skim milk is hard to beat in the feeding ration. Never allow the laying hens, or, in fact, any poultry, to stand on damp, cold floors.—Straw, chaff or leaves are cheap.

Scrape up the droppings under the roosts every morning, put in barrels and set the barrels under cover outside the henhouse.

Turkeys do better when not confined in close houses. An open shed is a good place for turkeys to roost except in cold weather.

Chicken cholera is a very rare disease. Indigestion and liver trouble on account of improper feeding are not very uncommon.

Do not think because the weather is cool the lice have quit business. It does not take very many lice to absorb the profits of a duck.

wen in mind. "Is it the first you have heard of it?"
"Yes." She looked inquiringly at her father.
"Why didn't you tell her?" Bohm persisted harshly. "Were you afraid?"
"No," Sam shook his head slowly. "I wasn't afraid, but it was unnecessary. You see, Betty, Colonel Bohm is willing to do all this for you on several conditions. You must leave me and never see me again. You mustn't even recognize me should we meet upon the street. You must change your name to Bohm and never permit yourself to be known as Betty Graham. Then you must—"
"Never mind, daddy, dear," said the girl. "That is enough. I know now. I understand why you never told me. It's impossible. Colonel Bohm knew that when he made the offer, of course. He made it simply to harass you, daddy. It's his revenge."
"And that's your answer, miss?" snapped the colonel, livid with wrath.
"I would not," she told him slowly, "accept a favor from you, sir, if I were starving."
Bohm drew himself up. "Then starve," he told her and walked out of the shop.

CHAPTER VI.

ON my way back from my walk I came across Duncan sitting on the wall of the bridge. I introduced myself to him, and we walked along together. Finally I asked him the reason for his presence in the town.
"I'm reading law, Mr. Littlejohn; that I shall continue. In the meantime I shall keep my eyes open for a job," he answered. "At any day, at any amount, the opportunity may present itself, the opportunity I'm looking for."
"Probably you're right," I assented, impressed, as we turned a corner.
A young woman in a very attractive linen gown was strolling toward us, quite prettily engaged with a book which she read as she walked. Her fair young head bowed beneath a sunshade which thrust her face becomingly. She gave me a shy smile and a low voiced greeting as we passed. Only my knowledge of the young woman prevented me from being blinded by her engaging appearance.
"That," said I when we were out of earshot, "shows you what a furor a good looking young man can create in a town like this. Josie Lockwood has est accommodations at the house of Betty Carpenter. He engaged the popular imagination no less than mine own, although I was more intimately associated with him as a fellow resident at Betty Carpenter's. My professional angles making their habitual demands upon my time, I saw, it may be, less of him than many of our people. Certainly I learned less of his ways from first hand knowledge. But from my desk—it's the nearest to the window right above the postoffice door—I was enabled to keep a pretty close line upon his habits and movements during the first fortnight of his stay in Radville.

At home I saw him with unvarying regularity at mealtimes and less frequently after supper. Between whistles he seemed to observe a fairly regular—prime to the morning after breakfast he walked abroad for his health's sake. In the afternoon and evening he sequestered himself in his room for the pursuit of his legal studies. About the gentleness of these latter I was long without a question. Having been privileged to inspect his room, I found it replete with an atmosphere of highly commendable application. His writing table was a model of neatness, and his store of legal treatises impressive one vastly. That no one, not even Betty Carpenter, ever saw the room with on remarking the open volume of "The Law of Torts," with its numerous pages painstakingly spaced by slips of paper by way of bookmarks, is an attested fact. That it was always the same volume is less widely known.

Less directly—that is to say, via my window—I learned of him copiously from sources which would have been anonymous but for my long acquaintance with the voices of the townspeople. I write these pages at my desk at home and, if truth's to be told, somewhat surreptitiously. But with these voices ringing in my memory's ear I seemed still to be sitting at my erstwhile desk by the window, looking out over Courthouse square, chewing the rubber heel of my pencil while I listen.

Immediately opposite, on the far side of the square, the courthouse rises proudly in all the majesty of its columned front and chiseled sides. Farther along there's the Methodist church, very severe, with its rows of sheds on one side for the teams of the more rural members. Behind them all bulk our hills, dim and purple against the overwhelming blue of the sky. It's very quiet. There are few sounds and those few most familiar—the raucous wharvey of a rooster somewhere on the outskirts of town, an intermittent thudding of hoofs in the high deep dust of the roadway, Miles Stetson wringing faint but genuine shrieks of agony from his cornet in a room behind the opera house on the next street, periodically a shuffle of feet on the sidewalk below, less frequently the whine of the swinging doors at Schwartz's place and above it all, perhaps the shrill but not unpleasant accents of Angie Tutbill as she pauses on the threshold downstairs and injects surprising information into the nothing reluctant ears of Mame Garlson.

"He's got six suits of clothes, three for summer and three for winter, and two others to wear to parties, one regular full dress suit and another with-out any tails on the coat that he told Miss Carpenter was a dinner coat, but Roland Barnette says he must've meant a tuxedo, because nobody wears that kind of clothes except at night, so how could he be a dinner coat? And Miss Carpenter told me he's got twelve striped shirts and eight white ones and dozens of silk socks and two dozen neckties and handkerchiefs till you can't count 'em."

Mame punctuates this monologue with a regular and exuberant "My lord!" and the young voices fade away into the midsummer afternoon quiet. I am free to resume my interrupted flight of fancy, but I refrain. The atmosphere is soporiferous, hardly conducive to editorial inspiration, and I find the commingled flavors of red cedar, glue and rubber quite nourishing.

Presently Dr. Mortimer, the minister, comes down the street in conpany with his deacon, Blinky Lockwood. They are discussing some one in subdued tones, but I catch references to a worthy young man and the vacancy in the choir.

Josie Lockwood rustles into hearing with Bessie Gabriel in tow. Josie is rattling volubly, but with a hint of the confidential in her tone. She insists that, of course I never let on, but every time we meet I can just feel him looking and—

Bessie intervenes. "Why, Tracey Tanner's just crazy for fear he'll take on with Angie."

I can see Josie's head toss at this. "I bet he don't know what Angie Tutbill looks like. That's too absurd!"—"Absurd" is Josie's newest word. It's a very good word too, but sometimes I fear she will wear it threadbare. It closes her remarks, as the two girls dart into the postoffice, and there is peace for a time; then they emerge, giggling, and I hear Josie declare: "I'd go Roland Barnette to do it, but he's so jealous. He makes me tired."

Bessie's response is inaudible. "Well," Josie continues, "I'm simply not going to send them out until I meet him. Father said I could give him a week from Saturday, but I won't unless—"

Bessie interrupts again inaudibly. "Of course I could do that, but if I just said 'Miss Carpenter and guests' that money old Homer Littlejohn'd think I meant him, too, and if I only said 'guest' it'd look too pointed. Don't you think so?"

To my relief they pass from hearing, and I feel for my pipe for comfort. Anyway, I never did like Josie Lockwood. Smiling, I meditate on the astonishing power of personality. Here is Mr. Nathaniel Duncan no more than a fortnight in our midst (the phrase is used cautiously as something sacred to country journalists), and behold, not yet has the town ceased to discuss him. The control he has over the local mind and imagination is certainly wonderful, the more so since he has apparently made no effort to attract attention—rather, I should say, to the contrary. Quiet and unassuming he goes his way, minding his own business as carefully as we would mind it for him, with all the good will in the world, if only we could find out what it is. But we can't leave him alone.

Tracey Tanner interrupts my musings.

"Hello!" he twangs, like a tuneless banjo.

"Lo, Tracey." This lofty and blase greeting can come from none other than Roland Barnette.

"Where you going?"

"Over to the railway station."

"What for?"

"To give you something to talk about. I'm going to send a telegram to a friend of mine in New York."

"Aw, you ain't the only one can send telegrams. Sam Graham sent one just now."

"He did?"

"Uh-huh. I was sort of hangin' round when he came in, and I seen him send it myself."

"Sam Graham telegraphing? Do you know who to, Tracey?" Roland's superiority is wearing thin under contact with his curiosity. This surprising bit of news makes him distinctly more affable and inclined to lower himself to the social level of the son of the livery stable keeper.

As for myself, I am inclined to lean out of the window and call Tracey up lest he get out of hearing before I hear the rest of it. Fortunately I am not thus obliged to compromise my dignity. The two are at a pause.

"Change a cigarette and I'll tell you," bargains Tracey shrewdly. "Lew Barker told me after Sam'd gone."

The deal is put through promptly.

"He was telegraphing to— Got a match?"

For once I am in sympathy with Roland, whose tone betrays his desire to wring Tracey's exasperating neck.

"Aw, he was only telegraphin' to Gresham & Jones for some sody water sirups."

"Where'd he get the money?" There's fine scorn in Roland's comment.

"I dunno, but he handed Lew a five dollar bill to pay for the message."

"Well, if Sam Graham's got any money he'd better hold on to it instead of buying sody water sirups. I guess Blinky Lockwood'll get after him when he finds it out. He owes Blinky a note at the bank, and it's coming due in a day or two, and Blinky ain't going to renew, neither."

"Sam seemed cheerful 'nough. Anyhow, it ain't my funeral."

I have now something to think about, indeed, and am more than half inclined to stroll over to Gresham's and find out what has happened on my own account when the voices of Mutt and Watty, the tailor, drift up to me. The couples are coming down for their regular afternoon session on the postoffice benches, a function which takes place daily just as soon as the sun gets round behind the building so that the seats are shaded. And I pause, true to the ethics of journalism. It's my duty not to leave just yet.

Surprisingly enough, these two likewise are discussing Sam Graham. At least I can deduce nothing else from Mutt's first words, though their subject is for the moment unaltered.

"Yes, sir; he's the poorest man in this town."

"Yes," Watty quavers—"yes, I guess he be."

"And he's got no more business sense into him than God give a goose."

"No; I guess he ain't."

"Why, look at the ying things he's run down at his store since Margaret died. She kept things a-runnin' while she was alive."

"Yes; she was a fine woman, Margaret Bohm was."

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and quite the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. HALL'S CATARRH CURE, manufactured by F. J. CENEY & CO., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional remedy. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. ANOTHER NEW METHOD

Western Man Has Novel Method of Saving Fruit

Holds Back Buds by Flooding Orchard With Water.

Eben W. Barker, a well known rancher residing south of Clifton, Colorado, has evolved a scheme for saving fruit from frost without resorting to smudging. He has been experimenting along this line for several seasons and now announces that he has discovered a method by which he this year saved his pears without lighting a fire.

Early in the season—as soon as the water was turned into the irrigation ditches—he dug a shallow pool around each of his pear trees on two acres. Into this he permitted the run and to freeze. He then covered up the frozen water with soil, forming a heavy mulch. By this method his trees were held backward for two or three weeks, and when the heavy freeze came, his buds were in such a condition that they were not affected in the slightest by the drop in temperature.

On still another acre Barker tried a different experiment. He opened up his headgates on the night the freeze was announced and allowed the water to run down his tree rows during the cold spell. In many of the ditches the water was frozen solid underneath the tree, but the blossoms directly above were not affected by the cold.

This method of saving a fruit crop is comparatively inexpensive and many of the ranchers who are not yet equipped with smudge pots plan to try the scheme on a large scale next season.

THEATRICAL

Alan Villair as "Easy Going Jim" and a good company in the four act comedy drama "Jim and the Singer."

From the South Haven Tribune of May 4: "The Richards, a St. Louis musical student, takes charge of a stock farm left her by her father, Jim Decker, a childhood friend, happens along and Sue gives him work. Sue's farm is not a success on account of the continual theft of horses. Accidentally Jim discovers that Jackson, Miss Sue's foreman is the thief, but before Jim can get the necessary proofs to convict him, Jackson, by a cunning scheme, compels Jim to go away, leaving him, Jackson, free, in his endeavors to marry Miss Sue, but the intense human interest, and the good comedy, Mr. Villair's cool, witty 'Jim,' Miss Codair's line 'Sue' and singing impersonations, Mr. Sylvester's 'Jackson' and the splendid company make a splendid evening's entertainment."

At the Charlevoix Theater, Thursday, May 23.

Uncle Josh Spruceby was greeted with a fair sized audience Monday evening at the Charlevoix theater. The play as a whole was not up to the expectation of the audience. The character were weak in their delivery and acting. The sonnette was clever in most of her work, but at times she overdid the droll comedy of her part. The audience hardly recognized the playing qualities of the company with aplomb. The Rubie band was funny and rendered a couple of selections that were pleasing and added greatly to the evening's entertainment. Better plays should be seen in this town at this time of the year. Jim and the Singer for Thursday is considered good and comes highly recommended from other towns in the northern part of the state.

The Three Reeves, in their musical act at the Majestic theater the last of the week, was a great improvement over the first half. The rendition of the numbers was uniquely piloted over the footlights and although the act was short it was appreciated.

The Amo Sisters the first half of this week put on a slugging and dancing act which was beautifully costumed and is clean in every way, dealing with unusual numbers and costume work as is seen in the most elaborate musical comedies.

Mr. Cory will find that looking acts to the taste of the public in Charlevoix runs to more or less of a comedy nature and that with good singing and dancing numbers the people will come his way and will patronize this popular play house.

I guarantee our work on bicycle repairing and baby car retiring at Benj. Brown.

KILLING WITCH GRASS.

Two Ways of Fighting the Pasture Weed Described—One Is Unusual.

One spring which grass began to show in a clover pasture. It was a wet season, and we couldn't keep it down, says a Wisconsin correspondent of the American Cultivator. The next season I put some ground into cabbage, just a little cabbage along where this quick was, and there is one of the crops that will help to clean the land by the amount of thorough cultivation of the ground. I hoed it out all summer long, clear on up to the 1st of September, and last season I put a strip of corn again on this same ground in order to kill the quick out if there was any left, but I failed to find any there at all, and it was cleaned out just by working it thoroughly with the cabbage crop the year previous.

A somewhat unusual method of fighting witch grass was described in a Wisconsin farmers' meeting. The infested land was heavily mowed in the winter or spring and the mowing harrowed two or three times to work it down among the roots and stimulate rapid growth, which brings the root nearer the surface. When the grass begins to bloom it is mowed as it is in the weakest stage, when it is most easily destroyed. It is then plowed under, using a chain to turn under the tops and then carefully bury all the grass. The field is then harrowed and dish harrowed, the harrow being set over so as to slightly loosen the upper soil. Then buckwheat is harrowed in, two bushels per acre.

It was found that the buckwheat will keep down all the witch grass surviving, and the little that is left will be killed if the field is plowed and left in the furrow over winter. No attempt is made to harvest the buckwheat, but the improvement of the soil in the destruction of the witch grass is considered sufficient repayment for the use of the land one year. Those who would be unwilling to give up their land entirely for a season could plant a hard crop even after the witch grass had bloomed and was turned under. No doubt a hard crop would grow there, ouzily kill out the grass than any other means and would afford some direct return for the labor.

The greatest need of American farms is not more work, but more thought. The land needs thought and of the best, but who shall give it if not the owner?

GROWING WATERMELONS.

Directions For Cultivation of This Luscious, Big Bodied Fruit.

Watermelons are not as extensively grown in the north as muskmelons. This is one of the few fruits that have no valuable byproducts, as its juice cannot be converted into vinegar, nor can it, like the cantaloupe, be distilled into brandy.

The seed may be sown directly into the hills. About twenty seeds should be pushed down, pointed end first, to each hill. This sounds like lots of work, but it is quickly done. In the north it is customary to sow the seed in boxes and transplant to the field. It is well to use some quick available fertilizer so that young plants can get an early start. The hills should be about ten feet apart each way, but some of the smaller varieties may be planted as close as 6 by 8.

The watermelon is so easily grown that every home garden may raise a supply. There is a firm fleshed variety known as the citron-meloo which is valuable for preserving.

WINTER POULTRY ILLS.

Methods of Treatment Recommended For Catarrh and Liver Congestion.

One of the commonest of the winter diseases of poultry is catarrh. Cold, some people call it; others speak of it as roup. It is not this last, although so close is the resemblance at times that one could easily be misled. Any way, catarrh is serious enough. It is catching also. Among birds roosting with heads pressed closely together the sick ones are sure to give it to healthy fowls. It seems to follow along the line of pure breeds. This may be due to the fact that the penned breeding stock from which eggs and brooders have been bought has been housed too warmly and jampered and that somehow a predisposition to take on catarrh follows down through the generations.

You will first notice it by a peculiar shake of the head, next a running at the nostrils and sometimes gurgling in the throat. If you cannot master this phase of the disease in young fowls in a few days, better kill them. The stuffy nose, should be separated from the web, housed by themselves, fed heavily on rich foods, with arsenite of antimony or quinine in drinking water and mash. The head should occasionally be dipped in kerosene—half water, half kerosene. Two applications have been known to stop the nasal discharge. Get arsenite inlets one thousandth of a grain in strength and place twelve of these in one pint of water. If you give quinine give two grains to the fowl per day. This disease is decidedly dangerous among the young fowls, so many die with inflammation of the lungs, which seems to follow the catarrh.

The above disease is likely to take hold of the young in the cool days of fall, extending to the older fowls in winter. There is one winter disease of fowls a year old or over that is seldom known among the young—liver congestion. It is probably due to a rich ration, like corn and lack of sufficient grit. If one feeds sufficient bran with corn, as bran is a laxative, the danger may be averted, though the grit be missing.

Quite often one will not guess this trouble until the older, fatter hens begin dying. The remedy is varied food, grit and exercise.—Farm and Fireside.

MINERS, NOT FARMERS.

A society for prevention of cruelty to the soil should be formed to prevent farmers who do not read the agricultural papers from mining the potash and phosphoric acid and selling them without proper return to the land of their equivalent.

Twofold Value of Shade Trees.

The landowner who plants no shade trees deprives himself of two sources of lifelong enjoyment. First, he misses the beauty which the growing tree imparts to his surroundings and the comfort its shade may afford the dwellers in his farmland. Both human and four footed; second, he loses the exaltation of feeling that ever comes from the exercise of the altruism which plans for coming generations regardless of oneself.—Kansas Farmer.

Grafting Wax.

A good recipe for grafting wax is to take four pounds rosin, two pounds beeswax and one pound tallow. Set them on the stove in a pan or something of that character to aid in dissolving, and when they have reached the liquid state pour into a roll of cold water. This will make a thick mass like molasses candy, and it can be pulled and made into rolls as desired.—New England Homestead.

Working Soils When Wet.

Soils should not be worked when they are wet. This is especially true of those which do not have much organic matter. Clay soil makes a good brick because it is free from organic matter. Working some soils when they are too wet and allowing them to bake in the sun really makes brick of the parts turned up, and those parts will be about as productive as bricks would be.—Farm Progress.

The World's Southernmost City.

The capital of the territory of Magellan, belonging to Chile, is Punta Arenas, the southernmost city in the world, with a population of about 12,000, good wharves and stores, paved streets and extensive traffic. All vessels going through the strait stop at Punta Arenas, and much wool is shipped from there. It is a free port, has a wireless telegraph station, is a station for the Chilean navy and does a large business in the coaling of steamers. It is, in fact, a crossroad station between the east and the west.

WILL MICHIGAN ORCHARDING PAY?

Subject Ably Discussed by Man of Long Experience

DEPENDS UPON FOUR CONDITIONS

Bank Account, Experience, Industry and Ability to Get Help

Business is Good—For Those Who Know the Game—Conditions Have Changed.

Probably no other man is better qualified by reason of long experience and rare good judgment to discuss this subject than Mr. Ben Newhall, for thirty-five years at the head of the well-known firm of E. Newhall & Sons, commission merchants, Chicago, who has repeatedly visited orchards in all parts of the country. The facts and figures presented here by Mr. Newhall are beyond refutation and represent information that has taken years to secure.

Is the ordinary city man justified in giving up his business and attempting it?

Thousands of city people have bought, either in the last few months or are now thinking of buying, orchards and farms in all sections of the country.

So widespread has its movement become that the question becomes an important one, and not so easy to answer.

Speaking in a general way, the answer depends on four conditions; first, the bank account; second, the experience; third, the industry, and fourth, the ability to secure proper help.

But speaking specifically, a full answer would take an encyclopedia.

It seems quite simple enough—buy your land, stick in your trees, pick your crop and count your profits.

Just try it and see. There are more angles to the business and more conditions to consider than in a mail order business in the city of Chicago.

This great movement towards the country started some years ago with the orange groves of California and Florida. A little back-set in those two sections cooled people's ardor for a time, but not for long, and it broke out again in the apple and peach lands of Washington, Oregon, etc., and has lately expanded into other western states that depend on irrigation, and has last of all taken in Michigan.

Twenty years ago Michigan was an apple state and raised apples that were worth while; today she only raises imitations. There are exceptions that will be noted later. In 1890 more really fine apples were sent out of Michigan than have been raised in the whole irrigated country since they became states.

It was too easy, the raising of orchards in Michigan. Insect enemies were few, fungus diseases almost unknown, and all the man had to do in planting an orchard was to select good varieties, plant them with reasonable care, wait a few years and pick fine apples.

Today it's different. Insects by millions and new diseases galore. Every bushel of good apples costs time and effort, and it is the same with peaches, cherries, pears, in fact with all fruits.

Few of the people now rushing to the farms and orchards realize this. If they did, there would be less haste and fewer disappointments.

The orchard business in Michigan is good enough. There is nothing better for those who understand it; but so is the stock exchange and the board of trade for who understand those lines. For the ordinary city man, professional or otherwise, to attempt to personally plant and grow a commercial orchard without expert help, is about as hopeless as an old time farmer to go into Wall street.

But as before stated, the business is good—for those who know the game. There are not to exceed sixty orchards in the state of Michigan, north of Grand Rapids, that have had expert care from planting time on. I know nearly all of them and if there is a single one of the sixty that has not made handsome returns I don't know where it is.

and I do know of many from which returns have been phenomenal. I cannot say as much for the district south of Grand Rapids, for, while the Fennville district has had some remarkable crops of apples the big freeze in October 1905 or 1906 wiped out many good peach orchards and damaged some others.

On the other hand I know of hundreds of orchards, many of them in good location and in good soil, in all parts of Michigan; that for lack of proper treatment, have made an actual loss to the owner.

Between these two extremes are orchards that have had fair or ordinary care. Such orchards have unusually averaged a reasonable though not large, yearly profit to the grower.

While no man living can at the planting of an orchard look far enough into the future to predict what a given orchard may or may not produce ten years hence, or what prices may be, any one with fair judgment and long experience as a grower can come pretty near telling what a number of orchards under given conditions are likely to produce.

AN IDEAL STATE

For the Raising of Cereals of All Kinds

Percentage on Winter Wheat Crops on May 1 was ninety-one

The last report sent out by the Department of Agriculture at Washington clearly shows that Michigan is an ideal state for the raising of cereals of all kinds. It could be said, also, that it is the ideal state for the raising of any kind of soil and fruit crop. The report shows that its percentage on winter wheat crops on May 1 was 91. The general average was 86.1. On rye it was two points above the general average at 92. Certainly these figures are flattering to the Michigan farmers who have 948,000 acres coming into harvest this season of winter wheat.

The government crop report does not necessarily mean high tide prosperity in business, but a good crop report means a good foundation for everything. And it does remove the one overwhelming influence against a good business year.

It is accordingly with a sigh of satisfaction that our financial and commercial interests will receive the report as made public by the Department of Agriculture at the federal capitol. The crucial point in it, of course, is the winter wheat. And here there is a distinctly and a favorable tone.

For May the area of winter wheat to be harvested is put at 31,367,000 acres as against 29,041,000 acres at this time last year. And the condition of this crop is set at 86.1 compared with but 82.1 for a year ago. An improvement of almost three points is shown over the April condition, and the last ten years' average is slightly exceeded.

There are a few weak spots notably Kansas, where its crop condition today is put at but 76. But this figure, though below the average, is eleven points above that of May 1 last year.

Altogether the country may feel that with the crop report May has passed most successfully one of the crucial points which progress annually encounters. The one bright spot on the crop map is Michigan, not only in its cereals, but its fruit. Today conditions are ideal for a bumper crop of all kinds of fruit. The season has been perfect and the late drop in temperature after a warm spell did no harm. Conditions now existing point to a harvest of one of the biggest crops of fruit as ever known in the state.

G. A. R. AT YPSILANTI

Big Preparations for Semi-Centennial to the June 21-23.

Considering the very few years before everything relative to the Grand Army of the Republic will have passed into history and with a deep sense of appreciation at heart for the numerous deeds of valor accredited the veterans who will assemble in Ypsilanti for the big state semi-centennial encampment June 21, 22 and 23, liberal appropriations have been allowed by the city council in that city to be used by the various committees for their entertainment.

Preparations are being made for 10,000 guests during encampment week and a continuous program will be effected for entertainment every hour during the session. The big parade will take place on the morning of June 22 and for all soldiers who cannot walk and for the women of the G. A. R. and the Ladies of the G. A. R. there will be floats and automobiles. There seem to be a few soldiers, however, who feel that they are unable to assume the old time spirit of '61 and several letters have been received from officers asserting that the "old boys" who will return with them demand a place in the line—no carriages for them.

The parade will be planned on a basis of 3,000 men on foot aside from the men and women in carriages. A band of 50 bagpipers in full Highland costumes will feature the parade and the G. A. R. band of life and drum will be in the lead, to demonstrate as usual veterans can demonstrate the spirit of '76. A living flag formed by 20 school children will form a pretty section of the line.

SPECIAL PRIZES OFFERED

For Attractive Exhibits of Fruit at the State Fair

Notes of Work Being Accomplished in This District

The Western Michigan Development bureau has offered $100 in special prizes in connection with the Western Michigan fair at Grand Rapids and $100 in connection with the Michigan State fair at Detroit. In each case a $25 prize will be given for the largest, best and most attractive exhibit of fruit made by any individual or society in any one of the twenty counties making up the territory covered by the bureau.

First prize of $10 and a second prize of $5 is offered for the best 50 pound bale of alfalfa cured or green. Six dollar and $4 prizes are offered for the best and second best bushels of fall apples, winter apples, peaches, pears, plums and the best and second best exhibits of six varieties of grapes.

The Hon. Charles P. Light, former state commissioner of public roads and now special representative of the American Association of Highway Improvements is to assist the Western Michigan Development bureau this fall in carrying on a "Better Roads" campaign through the western Michigan territory. (The plan is being worked out for this campaign calls for a special train to make the several western Michigan points that the road enthusiasts may get directly at the people.)

Grant township, Mason county, has by vote of its tax payers, decided to issue bonds in the sum of $3,000 for the purpose of building gravel roads within its limits.

The outlook for a cherry crop in the northwest section of western Michigan is exceedingly bright. The weather conditions prevailing during the winter and spring have been favorable to this fruit.

Orchard demonstration and the illustrated lecture "A Farmer for Every Forty" are to be given at the different points in Charlevoix county during the week beginning June 18.

MEET IN JUNE

Supervisors Hold Special Session to Equalize Taxation

County Treasurer Must Publish Copy of a Statement of Equalization.

Under the terms of the act creating a new state board of equalization the boards of supervisors of the several counties must hold a special session this year on the fourth Monday in June to equalize the assessment rolls of their respective counties and prepare a report for the state board of equalization, which must be completed before the second Monday in July.

Other rather radical changes are made in the old act by the new measure, which was given immediate effect. The chairman of the state tax commission supercedes the lieutenant-governor as a member of the board and the act provides for a secretary who will be either the deputy auditor general or a clerk in that department. The tax commission is required to present to the board a statement showing the actual cash value of all real and personal property in the state, except that paying a specific tax or taxed under the ad valorem system.

The state board of equalization will meet on the third Monday in August this year and every third and fifth consecutive year hereafter instead of every five years, as the old law provides.

At the conclusion of its session the board is required to notify the treasurer of each county of the action taken in equalizing between the several counties and the treasurer must publish a copy of the statement in one or more newspapers in the county. The board also is authorized to publish a copy of its proceedings and the statements presented by any of the counties relative to the equalization.

OUTWEIGHS THE TAX

Primary Money Sent Counties Amounts to Large Sum.

During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911, the state sent out to the counties $1,355,369 more in primary school money than was collected from the counties in taxes. The total apportionment for the year was $6,084,399 while the total state tax for 1910 was $4,729,000. Sixty-nine counties received more primary school funds than they paid in taxes, while fourteen were on the wrong side of the ledger. Bay county received $33,485 more, Genesee $19,738; Ingham $3,664; Kalamazoo $13,889; Muskegon $47,582; Saginaw $61,016; Lenawee $13,231; Kent $33,515; St. Clair $27,750; Wayne $33,724. Jackson paid $3,734 more than it received.

In view of the fact that only those counties having sufficient primary funds to pay teacher's wages for two years will participate in the distribution next year, it is expected that the apportionment per capita will be even larger than this year.

WILL MAKE EFFORT FOR BETTER ROADS

Development Bureau Will Materially Aid National Society

WILL SEND OUT GOOD ROADS TRAIN

Special Representative Will Examine Condition of District

16,000 Miles of Roads in Western Michigan and Only 344 Miles are Improved.

The Western Michigan Development bureau, having affiliated with the American Association for Highway Improvement, with offices in Washington, D. C., will be materially aided by the latter in the former's work of securing better road conditions in this section of the state.

The national association will send special representatives to accompany the good roads train, those interested in the development of the western part of the state expect to run through twenty counties. These special representatives also will be accompanied by an organizer, who will have charge of the plans for organizing good roads clubs and associations all along the route of the good roads train.

In other sections of the United States these good roads trains have been a most wonderful success and have attracted wide interest in the movement that is growing throughout the United States to secure better laws and a more systematic plan of laying out and constructing highways and encouraging the building and maintenance of better roads generally.

In western Michigan there are 16,000 miles of roads, only 300 of which are improved. More than 3,000,000 tons were hauled over these roads last year and the loss to the farmers, merchants and people in general amounted to hundreds of thousands of dollars.

D. H. Day of Glen Haven, president of the Western Michigan Development bureau, realizes that the working of good roads that will yield the best results must be done in a systematic manner and along these lines the aid of the American association will be of great benefit to him and his co-workers. State and local organizations and associations throughout the country are rapidly joining the national association which was organized by the leading men of the country last fall for the purpose of systematizing the work of improving and maintaining public roads all over the United States.

The Indiana Good Roads association recently has joined the American Association for Highway Improvements and they are now working together toward the adoption of some system which will obviate the waste of money that has resulted from a duplication and overlapping of official authority and the unsystematic treatment of the good roads problem throughout the state.

The national association at Washington hopes to arouse in counties throughout Michigan an interest and work that will make a compact state organization possible. In many of the southern states through which good roads trains have been operated hundreds of local organizations will soon follow. The work of this national organization has not been confined to any one section which is shown by the fact that associations in Maine and Oregon, Texas and Ohio and Florida have entered the new field.—Washington Correspondent, Grand Rapids Press.

DRANK SOME LYE

Little Son of Dr. A. M. Wilkinson Badly Burned About the Face.

Last Monday while Allan Blodgett Wilkinson, the little son of Dr. and Mrs. A. M. Wilkinson, was playing around the house, he found a can containing a small quantity of lye, which had been used to remove varnish from the floors, and drank a small portion of it.

In the absence of Dr. Wilkinson, Dr. Armstrong was called and by use of a stomach tube, removed the lye he had swallowed. His throat and face was badly burned but nothing serious will be the result of his experience.

Arthur Russell and family of Rileyville have been visiting at George Dawson's. They took back a cow and a calf with them.

Representative Emerson had quite an interesting time at Lansing. Wonder why he voted for county unit and voted to allow saloons to open on certain days? If it is wrong for saloons to do business, why vote for them at all? Why not take a stand on either one side or the other? Before he is elected, again, we think the people of Antrim county will ask him to do this.

I have some of the best fruit lands of the county for sale. I have buyers continually calling for fruit farms. If you want to buy or sell come to me as I can save you money. Joel Johnston.

OVERTAXED

Hundreds of Charlevoix Readers Know What It Means.

The kidneys are overtaxed; Have too much to do. They tell about it in many aches and pains—

Backache, sideache, headache. Early symptoms of kidney ills. Urinary trouble, Bright's disease, diabetes, follow.

The statement below shows you a certain cure.

Mrs. C. Thompson, 123 Elmwood Ave., Traverse City, Mich., says: "I can recommend Doan's Kidney Pills as highly today as I did in August 1906, when I publicly told of our experience with them. We found Doan's Kidney Pills superior to any other remedy we have ever tried for pains in the back and other symptoms of kidney complaint. The relief given by their use has been permanent. I can say that whenever they have been taken at my suggestion, the best results have followed."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, New York, sole agents for the United States.

Remember the name—Doan's—and take no other.

Orchard and Garden.

Some orchards have soil fertility, but need spraying; some are sprayed, but need pruning, and so on. Find out what it is that is limiting the orchard's productivity.

Winter is one of the best times of the year for transplanting trees. Take them up with a large ball of frozen earth about their roots. The frozen ball of earth is a perfect protection to small and tender roots.

When the thaw comes see that the grapevine trellis is put into nice condition. Straighten posts, tighten and fasten wires, tie up the vines, remove and burn brush.

To make chrysanthemums bushy and compact pin the branches back from time to time.

Dig out and burn all dead and badly diseased fruit trees. Put the ashes in the hole where the tree stood. Before resetting the trees mix a few shovelfuls of well rotted manure with the soil. This will accelerate the growth of the young trees.

Literary Notes

The rag-time song-writers have written raggedy around almost everything, but it was Ben Deely and Percy Wenrich who hit upon the historical spot. "The Alamo,"

In San Antonio, and have shredded it, out like a breakfast food, and hereafter, in addition to its other glories, it will become identified with that truly American style of syncopated music known as the "Rag."

"Alamo Rag" has come to stay, for it is a mosaic of tattered, dislocated and fractured melodies. As a sure cure for gout or rheumatism, its feet-lifting power is without equal. It is a dance compeller, and a Quaker listening to it without an equilibrator is doomed. In a Broadway restaurant, where colored waiters are in attendance, the proprietor has forbidden the playing of the "Alamo Rag" in order to save his crockery. The words may not appeal to some on account of their connection with a famous landmark, but the music is so catchy and original that it is bound to become popular. Billy Van and the Remount Sisters are adding fresh laurels to their fame with the "Alamo Rag."

But, that Alamo Rag, that Alamo drag.

Now, honey, if you think this talk is phoney.

Take trip to San Antonio. Lawdy, I could just die, whenever they play the Alamo Rag.

THE FORTUNE HUNTER

Novelized by
LOUIS JOSEPH VANCE
From the Play of the Same Name by WINCHELL SMITH

Copyright, 1910, by Winchell Smith and Louis Joseph Vance

"And, they ain't no doubt about it. Sam had money into the bank when she died. But ever since then it's been all go and no come in with him. He keeps fussin' and fussin' with them inventions of his, but no one ever heard tell of his gettin' anything out of 'em."

"And what'd he do with all the money he had when Margaret died?"
"Spent it, what he didn't lend and give away and lose indoors' notes for his friends and then havin' to pay 'em. And, speakin' of notes, I heard Roland Barquette say t'other day that old Sam had a note comin' due to the bank an' Blinky wasn't goin' to renew it any more."

"Course Sam can't pay it."
"Certainly he can't. I was in his store day before yesterday, and they wasn't nobody come in for nothin' while I was there. He don't do no business to speak of."

"How long was you there, Hiram?"
"From 9 o'clock to noon."
"What doli?"

"Nuthin'—jes' settin' round."

"I see him today goin' into the bank. Guess he must 've gone to see Lockwood 'bout that note."

"Well, I don't envy him his call on Blinky Lockwood none."

"Mebbe he went in to deposit his coupons," Watty chuckled.

Hiram snorted, and there was silence while he filled and lit his pipe.

"I hear tell this mornin'," he resumed, "that Josie Lockwood's goin' to give a party next week."

"Yes, I hear it too. Angie Tutthill was talkin' 'bout it in Mame Garrison up to Leonard & Call's. She said they was goin' to have the biggest time this town ever see—goin' to decorate the grounds with lanterns and have ice cream sent from Philadelph'y, and cakes too. Can't make out what's come into Blinky to let that gal of his waste money like that."

"I figger," says Hiram after a sapient pause, "she must be gettin' it up for that New York dood."

"Duncan?"

"Uh-huh."

"I didn't know he was 'quainted with the Lockwoods."

"I didn't know he was 'quainted with nobody."

"Nobody—ceptin' Homer, Littlejohn and Hetty Carpenter, and they don't seem to know much about him. I call him darn cur'us. Hetty says he's allus a-settin' in his room a-studyin' and a-studyin' nad a-studyin'."

"He goes walkin' mornin's, Hetty told me."

"Waal, he don't come downtown much. Nobody hardly ever sees him 'cept in church."

Hiram ponders this profoundly, finally delivering himself of an opinion which he has never forsaken. "I ejahn he's a 'spicuous character."

"Don't look to me as though he knew 'nough to be much of anything," says Watty, now, if he's a real student and they ain't no outs 'bout him, what in tarnation's he doin' here? That's jest what I'd like to have somebody tell me, Watty."

"Hetty sez he sez he wants a quiet place to study."

Hiram snorts with scorn. "Oh, fiddle! You don't catch no New York young feller a-settin' down in Iadville unless he's crazy or somethin' worse."

"Tain't no use tellin' Hetty Carpenter that."

of a period of philosophical consideration, "is all crazy about clothes. When a feller's got good clothes you can't make them see no harm into him, no matter what he is. I pressed some of Duncan's last Saturday. I never see clothes—such goods and linin's. They was made for him, too—made by a tailor on Fifth avenue, New York. I forgot the name now."

"Waal, Roland Barquette sez they ain't stylish. He sez they're too much like an undertaker's gump."

"Waal, Roland oughter know. He's the fanciest dressed up feller in the county."

"Yes, I guess he be."

The subject apparently languishes, but I know that it still occupies their sage meditations, and presently this is demonstrated by Hiram, who expectorates liberally by way of preface.

"When this cuss Duncan fust come here," he says, with a self contained chuckle, "ev'rybody but me figgered he had stacks of money. Guess they be singin' a different tune now sinst he's been goin' round askin' for work."

This is news to me, and I sit up, sharin' Watty's astonishment.

"Be he a-doin' that, Hiram?"

"That's what he's been a-doin'."

"Funay I missed hearin' about it."

"He only started this mornin'. He went to Sothern & Lee's and Leonard & Call's and Godfrey's, and then I guess he must 've quit discouraged. They wouldn't none of them give him nothin'. Leastways that's what they said after he'd gone out. He didn't give anybody a reel chance to say anything. I was in Leonard & Call's, and he came in and asked for a job, but the minute Len looked at him he turned right round and slunk out without a-waitin' for Len to say a word."

Hiram smoked in huge enjoyment of the retrospect. "He's the curiousest critter we ever had in this town."

"Yes," agrees Watty; "I guess he be."

At this juncture comes an interruption. Tracey Tanner returns hotfoot. Either he has been running or his breathlessness is due to excitement. Before the two upon the bench he pauses in agitated glee, a bearer of tremendous tidings.

"Hello!" he pants.

"Now, you Tracey Tanner," Hiram cuts in sharply, "you run 'long and don't be a-botherin' round. Seems like a body never can get a chance to rest 'with you children allus a-buttin' in."

"Aw, shet up," says Tracey dispassionately. "I only wanted to tell you the news."

Watty quavers, "What news, Tracey?"

"Well," says the boy, "I'll tell you, Watty, but I wouldn't 've told him after what he said."

"But what's the news, Tracey?" There is suspense in the iteration.

"Well, seem's it's you, Watty."

"You, Tracey Tanner, you run 'long and stop your jokin'!" Interrupts Hiram with authority.

"Tain't no joke; it's news I'm tellin' you. Say, what d'ye think, Watty?"

"Yes, Tracey, yes? What is it, boy?"

"That—Noo—York—dood," draws Tracey, "is a-workin' for Sam Gra-ham."

A dramatic pause ensues. I rise and find my coat.

"Tracey Tanner," shrills Hiram, "be you a-tellin' the truth?"

"Kiss my hand and cross my heart and vow honest I jahn I seen him up ward, crossin' the railroad and the river, north through a smiling agricultural region, east to the Plats. He was truckin' up Main street toward Center shortly after 11.

Recognition of Leonard & Call's familiar shop front fired him with a spirit of adventure and enterprise. He stopped short, thoughtfully rubbing his small mustache the wrong way, his vision glued to the embarrassingly candid window displays.

"It'd be an awful thing for me to do. Think of yourself, man, jumpin' counters in and out among all those—those things like a himate monkey performin' on a Monday mornin's clothesline."

He thought deeply and sighed. "It ain't moral."

"But it's one of the rules; it must be done. Harry said a ribbon clerk was a social equal."

"Come, now! No more shenanigan! Brace up! Be a man!"

"A man? That's the whole trouble. I am a man. I've got no business in a place like that."

He turned and moved away slowly. But the idea had him by the heels. He struggled against a growing resolution to return. Then enlightenment came to him suddenly. He paused again, grappling with this amazing revelation of self.

"Great Scott! Harry was right, darn him! He said this place would reconstruct me from the inside out, and vice versa, and, by jinks, it has! I actually want to work!"

"Can you beat that—me?"

He swung back to Leonard & Call's, mentally reviewing his instructions.

"Let's see. I was to wait at least a month to let the shopkeepers get accustomed to the sight of me. Hiram, Harry certainly has a cute way of expressin' his thought. But it can't be helped. I can't wait. If I do I'll throw up the job."

"I'm to walk in and say politely: 'I'm looking for employment. If at any time you should have an opening here that you can offer me I shall endeavor to give satisfaction. Good day.'"

"But be careful not to press it. Just say it and get right out."

With the air of a man who knows his own mind he pulled open the wire screen door and strode in.

at Miss Carpenter's and lay for a time abed staring vacantly at the gaudily papered ceiling, not through laziness remaining on his back, but through sheer inertia.

"Why," he reflected aloud, "it does not seem reasonable, but I'm actually looking forward to the delirious disipation of chnreb next Sunday!"

"Me?"

"If Kellogg could only see me now! I must have done something to deserve this in my misspent life."

"Wonder if nothing ever happens here. I'd give a whole lot, if I had it, for a good rousing fire on Main street—the Bigelow House for choice."

"And it's got me to the point of drooling to myself, like those fellows you read about who get lost in the desert."

"Come! Get out of this! And, my boy, remember to count that day lost."

"THAT DOOD IS A-WORKIN' FOR SAM GRAHAM."

whose low descending sun sees nothing accomplished, nothing done."

"Probably misquoted, at that."

Suddenly he rose and dressed.

He was late at the breakfast and silent and reserved throughout that meal. Poor Miss Carpenter thought him dissatisfied and hung round his chair, purring with a solicitude that almost maddened him. As soon as possible he made his escape from the house.

The walk he indulged in that morning took him in a wide circle—south on the road to the Gap, then east.

HIS HEAD WAS DOWED.

ward, crossing the railroad and the river, north through a smiling agricultural region, east to the Plats. He was truckin' up Main street toward Center shortly after 11.

Recognition of Leonard & Call's familiar shop front fired him with a spirit of adventure and enterprise. He stopped short, thoughtfully rubbing his small mustache the wrong way, his vision glued to the embarrassingly candid window displays.

"It'd be an awful thing for me to do. Think of yourself, man, jumpin' counters in and out among all those—those things like a himate monkey performin' on a Monday mornin's clothesline."

He thought deeply and sighed. "It ain't moral."

"But it's one of the rules; it must be done. Harry said a ribbon clerk was a social equal."

"Come, now! No more shenanigan! Brace up! Be a man!"

"A man? That's the whole trouble. I am a man. I've got no business in a place like that."

He turned and moved away slowly. But the idea had him by the heels. He struggled against a growing resolution to return. Then enlightenment came to him suddenly. He paused again, grappling with this amazing revelation of self.

"Great Scott! Harry was right, darn him! He said this place would reconstruct me from the inside out, and vice versa, and, by jinks, it has! I actually want to work!"

"Can you beat that—me?"

He swung back to Leonard & Call's, mentally reviewing his instructions.

"Let's see. I was to wait at least a month to let the shopkeepers get accustomed to the sight of me. Hiram, Harry certainly has a cute way of expressin' his thought. But it can't be helped. I can't wait. If I do I'll throw up the job."

"I'm to walk in and say politely: 'I'm looking for employment. If at any time you should have an opening here that you can offer me I shall endeavor to give satisfaction. Good day.'"

"But be careful not to press it. Just say it and get right out."

With the air of a man who knows his own mind he pulled open the wire screen door and strode in.

Two minutes later he emerged, breathing hard, but with the glitter of determination in his eye.

"I wouldn't 've believed I could get away with it. Here goes for the next promising opening."

He headed for Sothern & Lee's drug store.

"Wonder what that fellow would say with it. Here goes for the next promising opening."

$10,000 From 22 Acres of Michigan Fruit

The last issue of The Fruit Belt tells just how a Michigan grower reaped this harvest in the past "off year." "My Method of Growing Peaches" by Oscar W. Braman gives the complete story as told by the grower, with not a detail left out. The secrets of his success, the result of years of experience revealed to you for the price of a subscription.

$4,000 Crop of Apples off 7 Acres

In this issue Miss Grace Taylor of Michigan, tells you how she harvested a $4000 crop of apples off seven acres. She had 900 barrels of the finest apples off 225 trees, one tree yielding 14 barrels. And this too in an "off year."

You can get all this valuable experience and much more for the price of a subscription. Send today. One year 50c. Three years $1.00. The Charlevoix Courier and Fruit Belt $1.60.

WILL ORCHARDS PAY?

to do on the average, in a locality with which he is well acquainted.

I know of orchards where actual results this past season were far ahead of the average, not only on apples but on cherries and peaches as well. I have one in mind, a little orchard which I bought near Grand Rapids.

There were six acres of Steel Reds, Spys and Jonathans. The price paid was high ($4.25 per barrel f. o. b. for all these varieties; there were a few trees of odd kinds which I did not buy) but was not a record price for last season by any means. There were a little over a thousand barrels of those varieties on about 170 trees. The sales at the station, including the culls, was $4,800. The barrels, picking and packing together cost approximately $750, leaving net receipts for the fruit on the trees of $4,050, or say $650 per acre.

One of the largest peach growers of the state near Fraakfort gave me his figures a short time since, and they showed last year's (1909) operation over $800 per acre net on one orchard of Elberta peaches. Considerable leeway there too, is there not? The same grower has a large acreage of cherries. He put them up artistically in western style, and of course gets prices above the average. His orchard of Montmorency cherries netted him over $1,000 per acre this past year, and his Oxharts much more.

It may be said: "It is not safe to base future expectations on present day prices." That's true enough, and were I going into a large planting proposition I should base my figures on a yield 50 per cent less than I really expected, on prices 50 per cent lower and on expenses and original cost of plant 50 per cent higher. If on that basis I could not see a future profit, I would not start.

It is the fashion for the trade and the consumer to complain of present high prices on fruit and to predict lower ones. I always do and yet, ten years from now, prices may be higher instead of lower.

Ten years ago, after a heavy crop, it was freely predicted that we would never again see apples as high as $2 per barrel at the shipping station. Since that time $4 has been paid several times for large orchards and in a few instances $5 and the average has been nearly $3, so predictions of lower prices may never be fulfilled, and they may be even higher than now.

Some will say: "You cannot compete with the west," but that is a mistake. Michigan can compete with any section, if they will but use the methods of the west.

We hear wonderful things about the west, and certain isolated orchards have done wonderful things to my certain knowledge. I know of some hundred dollars per acre crop, and a few double that, but I know of the same in Michigan, and my belief is that while the west has, to date, averaged earlier crops and better crop than Michigan, the well cared for orchards of Michigan will be doing business long after those of the west have stopped bearing.

The difference in flavor, in cooking qualities, in freight rates and in the cost of land is all largely in favor of Michigan, and my own belief is that the difference in net returns will average on the same side, for Michigan is waking up.

Notice to Dog Owners.

All dogs found without muzzles will be impounded. If not claimed in 48 hours they will be killed. Dogs must either be kept in an enclosure that cannot be entered by other animals or muzzled. Tying by chain is not sufficient protection. Any dog owner whose dog is taken up twice unmuzzled will be arrested.

MOTOR TRUCK ECONOMY.

Five Ton Vehicle Easily Handled Wellman's Big Lifboat.

The lifeboat of the ill fated airship America, in which Wellman and his party of six attempted to cross the Atlantic, was on exhibition at Worcester, Mass., recently and was promised to a Boston firm for the week following as an attraction to shoppers.

The problem of moving this lifeboat, which is twenty-seven feet long and six feet wide, from Worcester to Boston between closing time Saturday night and opening time Monday morning presented itself.

Mr. Vaniman, who was the engineer of the big dirigible and also its designer and builder, said: "First I tried to get the railroad people to give us a baggage car; then I telephoned the express company, but because of the size of the lifeboat it was impossible to take it through the side doors of a car, so it could not be shipped as regular express, and we should have needed a special car—an end door car at a prohibitive price.

"Our only way of moving it appeared to be to ship it by freight with all the attendant delays and troubles at the Worcester and Boston ends in loading and unloading. We had about decided on this course when the sales manager of a motor truck company, learning of our predicament, offered to lend us one of the company's big five-ton trucks. We gladly accepted the offer, and without any fuss or confusion the big truck backed up to the store at 8 o'clock Sunday morning and loaded on the entire exhibit, consisting of the lifeboat, sextants, the scientific instruments for air navigation, the nautical instruments, together with oars, sails, life preservers, cushions, blankets and provisions for six men for twenty days.

"The run to Boston was made in four hours and a half and was to us a great saving in time, labor and money. I take off my hat to the motor truck."

Best Form of Wire Splice.

The best form of splice for galvanized iron wire, says a writer in the Electrical World, is one in which the wire is twisted to form five complete turns in what is known as the neck of the splice, after which the splice is completed by means of four or five end turns. In which the end of each wire is turned in a close coil about a straight section of the other. Tests of various splices show that the end turns have very little holding power, but that most of the holding power is due to the turns in the neck, and that a joint with five properly made turns in the neck will be as strong as the wire it is made of and will yield but slightly at first until it is set, after which there is practically no yield up to the breaking point.

Use of Iodine in Surgery.

For producing perfect asepsis of wounds and of areas that have to be prepared for surgical operations, especially where a thorough scrubbing would involve considerable pain, the use of iodine of official strength has proved itself entirely satisfactory in a large number of cases, and its application for this purpose is rapidly extending, particularly in Germany. The tincture is applied by means of a brush, in thin layers, without previous cleansing of the wound or surface, except that sometimes benzine and alcohol are used to remove excess of grease. Irritation from the iodine is very rare, and this danger is more than compensated by the advantages of the method.

Tuning a Bell.

The general impression is that the tone of a bell is largely a matter of accident, but this is not so. A bell must be tuned the same as a piano or any other musical instrument. Every bell has five sounds, which must blend together in perfect harmony, and this is accomplished by shaving down certain parts until the desired harmony is secured. In the event of shaving too deep the bell is not injured, but the tuning operation is prolonged, as other parts must be operated on and cut away to a corresponding degree.

Formula For Liquid Veneer.

It is possible to make an excellent liquid veneer which gives a brilliant polish without rubbing from the following simple ingredients: Linseed oil, ten parts; vinegar, five parts; hydrochloric acid, two parts; enough putty powder to bind the mixture and a little amy acetate to perfume it.

His Experience.

"Pa," said the boy, looking up from his book, "what does a man's 'dollar half' mean?" "Usually, my son," replied his father from behind the evening paper, "it means exactly what she says."—The Philadelphia Press.

THEATRICAL

"Jim and the Singer" at Charlevoix theater last Thursday night was greeted by a very poor house, and was worthy of a packed auditorium. Allan Villair and Edna Codair came up to the standard of talented artists. James Sylvester was good and carried his work as the "heavy" with ease.

The pictures at the Charlevoix theater this week are the best ever seen in Charlevoix. Mr. Loskot has given the public some of the finest pictures and picture plays obtainable and each is well worth the time spent in seeing the high-class work of the talented artists. "Though Your Sins be as Scarlet" was the best film ever produced in this city.

The heavy rain dug up freshly planted seeds and wore deep gullies in the ground.—East Jordan Herald.

She was a kid with an investigating turn of mind, and inclined toward original research. She wanted a reason, too, for everything, and while in a discussion with her teacher over some trifling disagreement, asked with all the earnestness of an original Thomas: "What right has anybody to say that this or that isn't so? How does anyone know that what some one has said about it isn't untrue? How do we know that what someone has told us isn't something else? And how do we know but that somebody has been 'stringing' all of us? What right, anyway, has anyone to say that anything is that thing and who told them they might? And why hasn't anyone else a right to call that same thing by some other name? How do we know that two and two makes four?" "Oh, I don't know," answered the stricken teacher, "but there's not the slightest doubt about them, (not being the right name for you).

LIST OF NEW TEACHERS

Engaged by School Board for the Coming Year

But Four Changes to be Made in Entire Corps of Teachers.

But four changes appear in the list of teachers engaged for the coming year. Harry A. Craig of Mt. Pleasant, a graduate of Alma college, will take the place of R. L. Wise as principal, Mr. Wise having accepted an offer from Tekonusta, Michigan. Dwight C. Carpenter of Lansing, a graduate of the M. A. C. will teach physical science and geometry, Mr. Miller having decided to rest for a period of time and then take a preparatory course in college. The position as teacher of reading, grammar and civil government, filled the past year by Miss Wilson, has not been filled as yet. Hallie E. Chicago's Cigarette Law.

Chicago has taken firm hold of the cigarette habit among school children and proposes to abolish it. Public sentiment condemns the sale of cigarettes to school children, condemns the habit, and usually stops right there. With adequate law, vigorously enforced, there is no good reason why cigarettes should not be kept out of the hands of the school children entirely. It may perhaps be impossible to do just this, but it is not impossible to so restrict the sale as to prevent children from purchasing these poisonous little things. The Chicago ordinance imposes a license fee of $100 upon all dealers. The Ohio law now in force imposes an equally high license fee. In addition the Chicago ordinance forbids the sale of any kind of cigarettes within 200 feet of a schoolhouse. It also provides for the inspection of cigarettes by the health department, which is clothed with power to forbid the sale of such as are determined to be the more dangerous. During the discussion of the Ohio cigarette bill, now a bill, by its legislature, the fact was brought out that the cigarette habit was more or less prevalent in nearly all of the public schools of the state. And in the public schools of the most populous cities the habit was proved to be alarmingly prevalent. Besides its prevalence, it was shown just how deleterious to health of youth cigarette smoking is. In some of the cases cited, the nervous system was badly deranged and lung troubles were aggravated and the memory badly impaired. And in all cases such as were addicted to the habit became ashy in color, emaciated, dull-eyed and absent minded. In the pockets of boys addicted to the habit there were found cigar as well as cigarette stubs and bits of tobacco gathered from the streets, where they had been thrown, and on these foul and nauseating things those school children feed their unnatural appetites.

Neighborhood Notes

On Saturday of last week W. Randolph sold to Jerome J. Green and his brother, Robert Lee Green of Notre Dame near South Bend, Ind., the Rolla Johnson farm 3 1/2 miles southeast of town. This farm has a lake frontage entirely across the west side and will make a fine fruit farm as well as an ideal place to resort. Robert Lee Green who did the corresponding occupies the chair of chemistry in this famous college of Notre Dame, and we feel highly elated in having the professor select our country for planting a fruit farm and making a summer home. And as Mr. Green has traveled extensively, having travelled from the Atlantic to the Pacific and from the Arctic ocean to the Panama canal, it only goes to substantiate what we have advocated and reiterated that we are endowed by Nature with a unique country which has been proven as far as we have advanced in the development of it.—Central Lake Torch.

The local plant of the Lake Superior Iron & Chemical Co. closed down last Saturday night, and this shut down is for an indefinite period, resumption depending largely on the pig iron market. At present prices are very low—so low that furnaces cannot be operated at profit—and even with the demoralized market there is no demand. Some of the men will be retained and some repairing will be done at the chemical plant and furnace. With the large quantity stored in the yards it is hardly probable that the iron works will again go into blast before fall, even if they do then. Certainly they will not resume operation until there is a reaction in the iron market. It is more than possible that what is considered by the management unjust assessments compared with the valuation placed upon iron and other property in other places where they operate plants, may have had considerable to do with the "blowing out" at this time. In this, as in other communities, there are people who want others to pay their taxes—it is not the -blooms then some one else whom they think has the means to make the contribution and can be forced to do so.—Elk Rapids Progress.

While closing a window last week Carrie Warner, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Erasmus Warner, brought her arm in contact with a head of a needle, about three-quarters of an inch of which penetrated the flesh breaking off and leaving the point sticking in the casing. Dr. Moorhead attempted to remove the needle, but was unable to locate it, so the doctor accompanied her to Petoskey, where by the aid of an x-ray—the needle was found, and with considerably difficulty taken out.—Petoskey Journal.

People in country districts are reminded that they must file notice with their home school board before the fourth Monday in June, giving the name of pupils they desire to send to high schools, and the name of the high school they desire to attend. The school named must be one of the three nearest high schools. Tuition must be paid for all who apply, if they have passed the eighth grade no matter how long ago. Application must be made each year for each year.

CHURCHES JOIN IN CONVENTION

Problems of Church Unity May Be Solved by Young People.

WILL DISREGARD DIFFERENCES

Greatest Young People's Convention Ever Held in Michigan Will Open Thursday, June 22—Hundreds of Young People From Every Part of State Planning to Attend.

FEATURES OF UNITY.

The Episcopalian each day will be one of the convocations of churches. Dean Marks of the cathedral will speak twice. Prominent Methodists and Baptists are on the program. The hearty cooperation among all denominations in the role fosters spirit of unity.

Never in the history of Young People's conventions in Michigan has there been one quite so unique as the one to be held in Detroit, June 22-25. Besides the many other striking features the one that commands attention for immediately in this day of "Church Unity" discussion is the extreme interdenominational basis of the convention. The Detroit convention committee is made up of men and women representing most prominent denominations in young people's work. One of the convention churches is the Episcopal St. Paul's cathedral. The speakers chosen are among the most prominent men of the same communions. All of the plans are made with the definite purpose that young people will attend the convention in respect of denomination, but with the one determination to do the most good and to get the most out of the convention.

And why should it not be so? Why should we older people try to reproduce in our children sectarian differences which, though they were vital to us and our forefathers, have become meaningless today? Why not encourage our young people to be Christians first and then to be Methodist, Presbyterian, Baptist or what not afterwards? The great tasks that challenge the Christian church today demand a spirit of unity hitherto unknown. We who are so far removed from the frontier of Christian conflict are doing well to follow in the footsteps those who out there are so bravely upholding the standard of the Christ. But we are following with very uncertain tread, for really, that one of the chief sources of their power is the fact of their unity in the face of a common foe. If the Christian church could only learn the secret of the power of the forces of evil and then act upon that knowledge, there would be a wonderful unifying of forces, and forgetting of differences and best of all—a triumphant victory for the right.

This idea of unity must come, if it comes at all, through its incarnation in the life of the younger generation. As long as the churches insist on perpetuating their petty differences through their Westminster leaguers, Luther leagues, Epworth leagues, or Baptist Young People's Unions, just so long will the cause of real Christianity be retarded in the world. The day is coming, and it is not far distant, when there will be one great young people's society with one name, a branch of which will be in every church in the world. In this way the great ideal of Jesus Christ for His church, "that they may be one," will be approximated not only by the missionaries in the thick of the strife, but also by the younger generation of the world over.

It is with such an ideal in view that the Detroit convention committee is making plans for the coming convention. Every added one who attends will help on toward the glorious realization. Every member of a Christian Young People's society is welcome at the convention and is entitled to free entertainment if he presents delegate's credentials which have been properly signed. These credentials may be procured from Miss Mary R. Phinney, 104 Collingwood Ave., Detroit.

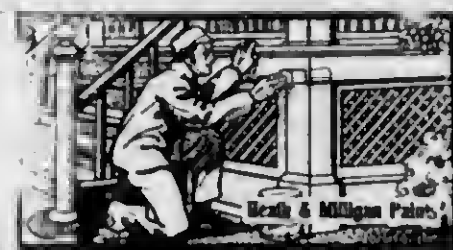

ENDEAVOR.

"What hast thou for thy scattered seed.

have said if I had the nerve to wait and listen.
In the drug store he experienced less difficulty in making his speech and exit. He flattered himself that he accomplished both gracefully, even impressively. And indeed you may believe he left a gaping audience behind him. So likewise at Godfrey's notion and stationery shop.
"Now, this afternoon," he mused, "I'll wind up the job. By night every one in town will know I want work."
It was 2 o'clock or thereabouts, gathered when, shaping his course toward Radville's commercial center, Duncan hesitated on the corner of Beech street, looking at a bareheaded eye up at the weather worn sign which has for years adorned the side of Tut-hill's grocery—a head radiating fixedly:

"THIS WAY TO GRAHAM'S DRUG STORE."
"Two druggists in Radville?" he mused. "Is it possible? Then it's Harry's mistake if the scheme fails. He said this was a one horse country town. But I'm blest if it isn't a thriving metropolis! Two! Here, I'm going to have a look."
He turned up Beech and presently discovered the object of his quest, a two story building of "frame," built less of the ardent earnest of a paint brush since time out of mind. On the ground floor the windows were made up of many small square panes, several of which had been rudely intended. Through them the interior glimmered darkly. In the foreground stood a broken bottle, shaped like a mortuary urn and half full of pink liquid. Beside it reposed a broken packing box in which tattered camphor balls nestled between torn sheets of faded blue paper. Of these a slight companion in misery stood on the far side of the window, a towering pagoda-like cage of wire in which crapped, doubtless, by means of some mysterious bait known only to alchemists three worn but brutal looking sponges were apparently shimmering in exhaustion. Back of these a dusty plaster cast of a male figure lightly draped seemed to represent the survival of the fittest over some strange and deadly patent medi-

"Looks like the very place for one of my acknowledged abilities," said Duncan. He turned the knob and entered, advancing to the middle of the dingy room.

A slight grating noise behind him brought Duncan round with a start. At a workbench near the window sat a white haired man garbed baggily in an old crash coat and trousers. His head was bowed over something clamped in a vise, at which he was tinkering busily with a file. He did not look up, but as his caller moved inquired mutely, "Well?"
"Good morning," stammered Duncan—"or-I should say afternoon."
"So you should," Sam admitted, still fussing with his work. "Anything you want?"
Duncan swallowed hard and mastered his confusion. "Would it be possible for me to speak to the proprietor a moment?"

"I should judge it would. Go right along," Sam said vigorously.

"Yes, I ask—are you Mr. Graham?"
"Yes, sir; that's me."
The filing continued stridently.

"I'm looking for employment," said Duncan hastily. "If—"

"Employment?"
Graham dropped his tools with a clatter and faced round. For a moment his eyes twinkled and a wintry smile lightened his fine old features.

"Well, I declare!" he said, rising. "You must be the stranger the whole town's been talking about."

"If at any time," Duncan pursued hastily, "you should have an opening here that you can offer me I shall endeavor to give satisfaction a good day, sir." And he made for the door.

"Eh, just a minute!" said Graham. "Are you in a hurry?"

Duncan paused, smiling nervously. "No, no—only I mustn't press it, you know—just say it and get right I mean I don't want to take up your valuable time, sir."

Graham chuckled. "Guess the folks haven't been talking much to you about me," he suggested. "You seem to have a higher opinion of the value of my time than anybody else in Radville."

"Yes, but—that is to say—"

"That if you're really looking for a job I'd like to give you one first rate."

Duncan started toward him in breathless haste. "You—you'd like to? You don't mean it?"

"Yes," Graham nodded, smiling with enjoyment of his little joke. It was harmless. He didn't for a moment believe that Duncan really needed employment, and on the other hand, it tickled him immensely to think that any one should apply to him for work.

"Well," said Duncan, staring, "you are the first man I ever met that felt that way about it."

Sam's amusement dwindled. "The trouble is," he confessed—"the trouble is, my boy, my business is so small I don't need any help. There isn't much of anything to do here."

"That's just the sort of place I'd like," said Duncan impulsively. Then he laughed a little uneasily. "I mean I'm willing to take any position, no matter how insignificant. I mean it, honestly."

"This might suit you, then?"

"I wish you'd let me try it, sir."

"But you don't understand," Graham was serious enough now. There wasn't any joke in what he had to say.

"To tell you the truth, I can't afford it. When your pay was due I'm afraid I shouldn't have any money to give you."

Duncan dismissed this paltry consideration with a privacy gesture. "I don't mind that part," he insisted.

"Mr. Graham, if you'll teach me the drug business I'll work for you for nothing."

He said it earnestly, for he meant it just a bit more seriously than he himself realized at the moment, and he was glad to think it was because Sam's serene and gentle, guileless nature had appealed to the young man.

"Between you and me," he hurried on, "it's this way—I've been here for two weeks with nothing to do but look at a book, and it's got me crazy enough to want to work."

As for Sam, as soon as he recovered he shook his head in thoughtful depression. "Well, I swear!" he said. "I guess you must find it pretty slow down here. But," brightening, "if you feel that way about it I'd better take you over to Southern & Lee's. They'd be glad to get you at the price."

"And in a week they'd think they were overpaying me," Duncan argued. "No; I've been there. Why not try me on here?"

"Well, I'm just a little bit afraid you wouldn't learn much, my boy. I don't do business enough to give you a good idea of it."

Duncan brushed this impatiently aside. "How much business are you doing here now?"

"Some days"—Graham reckoned it on his fingers—"I take in a dollar or two and some days nothing. There's my sody fountain," he said, with a jerk of a thumb toward it—"got that fixed up a little while ago, and it's bringing in a little—not much. You see, I need more sirups. I've only got vually now."

"Soda water?" Duncan jumped at the idea. "Hold on! All the girls round here drink soda, don't they?"

"Oh, yes," said Graham abstractedly.

CHAPTER VIII.

THE thought infused new life into the younger man's warring purposes. "Mr. Graham, I wish you'd let me come in here for a while. I don't care about wages."

Graham lifted his shoulders resignedly. "Well, my boy, it don't seem right, but if you really want to work here for nothing I'll be glad to have you, and if things look up with me I'll be glad to pay you."

Abruptly he found his hand grasped and pumped gratefully.

"Graham, when can I start?"

"Why, whenever you like."

In a twinkling Duncan's hat and gloves were off. "I'd like to now," he said. "Where can we get more sirups?"

"Unfortunately I'll have to buy them."

"How much?" Duncan's hand was in his pocket in an instant.

"Oh, no; you mustn't do that," Sam backed away in alarm. "I couldn't allow it, my boy. It's good of you, but—"

"Either," Nat told himself, "I'm asleep or some one's refusing to take money from me." He grinned cheerfully. "Oh, that's all right," he continued aloud. "I'll draw it down as soon as we begin to sell soda." He selected a bill from his slender store.

"Will $5 be enough?"

"Oh, yes, but it wouldn't be right for me to—"

But by this time Duncan was pressing the bill into his hand. "Nonsense!"

"WILL $5 BE ENOUGH?"

he insisted. "How can we build up trade without sirup?"

"But—but—"

"And how can I learn the business without trade?" He closed Graham's unwilling fingers over the money and skipped away.

Sighing, Graham gave over the unequal argument. "Well, if you're satisfied, my boy, but I'll have to write a bill for it."

"Telegraph!" Graham laughed. "That would kill Lew Parker, I guess."

"Who's he?"

"Telegraph operator and ticket agent."

"Well, he won't be missed much. Telegraph and tell 'em to send the goods C. O. D. Please, Mr. Graham. We want to get things moving here, you know. We've got to build up the business. We'll put out some signs and—"

and, well, we'll get the people in the habit of coming here somehow. You'll see."

He raked the poverty stricken shelves with an enquiring eye, all his energy fired by enthusiasm at the prospect of doing something. Graham watched him with kindling liking and admiration. His old lips quivered a little before he voiced his thought.

"You—you know, my boy, you've got splendid business ability," he asserted, with whole souled conviction.

Duncan almost reeled. "What?" he cried.

"I was just saying you have wonderful business ability."

"You're the first man that ever said that. I wonder if it's so."

"I'm sure of it."

"Well," said Nat, chuckling, "I'll write that to my ehum. He'll—"

"Oh, I can tell," Graham interrupted. "Now, I— Well, you see, I've been a failure in business. So far as that goes, I've been a failure in everything all my life."

Duncan stared for a moment, then offered his hand. "For luck," he explained, meeting Graham's puzzled gaze as his hand was taken.

Wondering, Graham shook his head, and gratitude made his old voice tremulous. He put a hand over Duncan's, patting it gently.

"I want you to know, my boy, that I appreciate," his voice broke. "It's mighty kind of you to buy the sirup—very kind."

"Nothing of the sort. It's just because I've got great business ability," Duncan laughed quietly and moved away. "We'll want to clean up a bit," said he. "Got a broom? I'll raise the dust a bit while you're out sending that wire."

"You'll find one in the cellar, I guess, but—your clothes?"

"Oh, that's all right. Where's the cellar?"

"Underneath," Graham told him sleepily, taking down a battered hat from a hook behind the counter.

"I know. But how do I get there?"

"By the steps. You go through that door there into the hall. The steps are under the stairs to our rooms. I live above the store, you see."

"Yes. Goodby, Mr. Graham."

"Goodby, my boy."

Duncan watched the old man move slowly out of sight, then, with a groan, sat down on the counter to think it over. "It wouldn't be me if I didn't make a mess of things somehow," he told himself bitterly. "Now you have gone and went and done it, Mr. Fortune Hunter. You stand a swell chance of getting away with the goods when you take a wingless job in a spavined country drug store with no trade worth mentioning and nothing to draw it with just because that old duffer's the only human being you've spotted in this burg."

"Wonder what Harry would say if he heard about that wonderful business ability thing. But what in thunder can we do to bring business to this lousy town?"

Instrumental solo, "Fairy Dance"—Orville Hilton.

Song, "Spring is Here"—1st and 2nd grades.

Instrumental solo, "The Garden Party"—Eddie Cook.

Song, "Joys of Life"—Fifth grade.

Instrumental solo, "Golden Rod"—Bernice Wells.

Solo, "Vacation Joys"—Ula Robinson.

Song, "Our Play is Over"—School.

The percentage of attendance for the past year is 90.

Diplomas for regular attendance and punctuality were awarded to the following pupils: Frankie Cook, Eddie Cook, Orville Hilton, Edna Scott, Belle Wells and Bernice Wells.

Many of the parents attended the program Friday.

Our trees are doing very nicely. They are all maple but two, which are basswood. These two were set out by Orville and Myron Hilton in memory of Mrs. R. C. Marsh and Miss M. Zeitler.

Miss Zeitler called on Mrs. L. Gravelin and Mrs. E. Cook and supper with Mrs. E. Gregory, Mrs. Hilton and Mrs. E. Scott.

To show their appreciation to Miss Zeitler for her service rendered during the past two years, the district raised her wages and asked her to sign her contract for a nine months term of school next year, which she did.

Orville Hilton gave his teacher a beautiful pendant of Charlevoix as a token of remembrance.

There is more catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional remedy on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address: F. J. ASPHALT FOR ROADS.

Will Make Excellent Binding, Says London Engineer.

Cecil Nathan, an engineer of London who gives especial attention to roadmaking, expresses the belief that asphalt is destined to take the place of tar as a binder of macadam roads. He deifies the "essential desiderata" of a satisfactory road as "smooth appearance and even surface following the contour of the road, which must be sanitary, dustless, noiseless and non-slippery." Mr. Nathan also stipulates that the ideal road must not only have these qualities, but be reasonable in initial cost and above all in maintenance.

"Many of the present generation will remember the phrase, 'Electricity is only in its infancy,'" says Mr. Nathan. "Well, today the road board is in its infancy, and I have no doubt that it will grow into as fine and healthy a child as electricity did. Like other infants, the road board is just beginning to speak, and the first word that it has been taught is 'tar.' Now, I hope it will very soon grow up and learn words of two syllables, such as 'asphalt,' and then be able to expound to road engineers the real meaning of this much misunderstood word."

"This is the tar age, and as an indirect palliative tar is serving its purpose today as a temporary expedient, but something much more permanent than the primitive methods of tar spraying or even tar macadam is required for the future, and I maintain that permanency will be obtained only from the adoption of waterproof road crust binders of either Lake Trinidad asphalt or Cuban asphalt, but preferably Cuban asphalt, owing to its having a higher melting point and its ability to withstand the rotting effects of water."

Oil Concrete Road.

The first stretch of oil concrete highway to be laid in Pennsylvania has just recently been completed on the Harrisburg-Linglestown road. It is about a quarter of a mile in length and is between Progress and Paxtonia. The oil concrete road is an experiment on the part of the state highway department, which in 1907 rebuilt the highway from the eastern terminus of the city to Paxtonia.

The section just laid replaces a quarter of a mile of road constructed of concrete. The new section of road is made of concrete into which are mixed asphaltic oils. The top surface is not arched so much as the rest of the road, the crown being constructed on a basis of three-eighths of an inch to a foot. The crown is the same as that used in laying a brick pavement.

Missouri's Oldest Road.

Twelve miles of the old "klicks highway" near Elkton, Mo., the oldest road in Missouri, is being rebuilt with rock macadam. Curtis Hill, the state highway engineer, has organized a special benefit assessment road district to carry on the work. Later the road will be extended to New Madrid.

FREE ROAD DRAGS.

To encourage road work Roy Williams, highway engineer of Macon county, Mo., gives a road drag free to every farmer who makes application for one. If the farmer does not use his drag it is taken from him and given to some one more industrious. The roads of the county have been much improved by the arrangement.

GOV. OSBORN AT C. E. CONVENTION

Good Citizenship Will Hold Important Place.

EX-GOV. HANLEY IS COMING

Everything in Readiness for Christian Endeavor Convention at Detroit—Many Prominent Men Will Attend. Convention This Year Will Embrace All Young People's Organizations.

The young people of Michigan will be given an opportunity of hearing some of the country's best and most widely-known public men at the Twenty-second Annual Convention of the Michigan Christian Endeavor Union to be held in Detroit, June 22-25th.

The convention will this year embrace all the Christian Young People's organizations in the leading Protestant denominations of the state, and for this reason it is necessary that the speakers be the most representative men that can be secured in the country. The committee believes that this has been accomplished.

The convention will be formally opened on Thursday evening, June 22, at the First Congregational church, by Hon. Chase S. Osborn, governor of Michigan, who will address the meeting on the subject of "Good Citizenship." Governor Osborn needs a special introduction to any person in Michigan, neither is any coming necessary on his views of good citizenship. Since he has been in office he has had numerous opportunities of proving just where he stands in these matters. In view of this fact the committee which had this matter in charge acted wisely in choosing Governor Osborn to open a convention of Christian Young People. While he has held his office for only a short time he is widely known for his ability in performing the duties which confront him. Not only is he well known in this state, but throughout the country his name is becoming a familiar one.

On Saturday evening, June 25th, a large popular meeting will be held in the largest auditorium obtainable for the purpose, at which Hon. J. Frank Hanley, ex-governor of Indiana, will speak. His subject will be another phase of "Christian Citizenship." The Governor Osborn, ex-governor Hanley needs no introduction in Michigan people. As a proof of his popularity Detroit people, at his last visit there, filled the large armory to its capacity at a Sunday afternoon meeting, and there are promises of a record-breaking crowd at the convention meeting. Seats will be reserved for all registered out-of-town delegates, so that those who have not yet had an opportunity of hearing him will be sure to hear him at this meeting. Governor Osborn and ex-governor Hanley are both very popular as platform speakers, and many will attend the convention to have the opportunity of hearing these two prominent public men.

The Christian Endeavor Union throughout the country have from time to time taken active interest in matters pertaining to good citizenship, and a Christian Endeavor convention of the magnitude of the Detroit convention would seem incomplete without the above speakers, or someone of equal merits.

All registered, qualified delegates will be entitled to a free automobile ride, a free boat ride and free entertainment (dining and breakfast) upon presentation of the necessary delegate's credentials. These credentials can be secured by addressing: Miss Mary E. Phinney, 107 Collingwood Ave., Detroit. Delegates must present these credentials, properly signed by the president and secretary of the delegate's society, upon arrival in Detroit.

A THRIFTY TENOR.

Tamagno Walked, but His Carriage Bill Had to Be Paid.

Several years ago a tenor named Tamagno was engaged to come to America and sing at the Metropolitan Opera House, New York. He was paid $1,000 a night. This is a sum which would make many people willing to put up with small extra expenses, but not so Tamagno. Before leaving Europe he made a stipulation that he be furnished with a carriage to and from the opera house every night. This was inserted in the contract.

When he arrived he found a carriage waiting at the pier. He rode uptown—always at the expense of the opera company—and took a look around. Then he decided to put up at the Marlborough hotel, which happened to be only three short blocks from the Metropolitan Opera House. Every time he sang he walked up to the opera house, refusing to take a carriage. He said he had just as soon walk. When it came time for him to return to Europe he presented a bill for over $200 "for carriages to suit from the opera."

"But you didn't take a carriage," said the manager of the opera company.

Tamagno bowed low and invited the manager to look at the contract. He repeated the same suggestion when ever anything was said about it. The result, of course, was that the $200 had to be paid. He stood out for it with as much insistence as if he hadn't seen a dollar for a month, and all the time he was getting $1,000 a night.

PETTICOATS TO GO IS PARISIAN EDICT.Women of Fashion to Substitute Turkish Trousers.

No more radical change in the dress of woman has ever been heard of than that culled from Paris recently declaring that one of the latest French dressmakers has relegated petticoats to the attic and that the smartly dressed woman of the moment will wear a modified Turkish trousers costume.

The short lived hobble skirt, in other words, lasted just long enough to give the dressmakers and molders of women's fashions time to invent a garment just a little more outre and extraordinary. When Mary Garden arrived in New York last fall she had in her wardrobe one of these new Turkish trousers gowns. She declared at the time that it was not made specially for her, but was "the mode." The reporters laughed and would not believe the tummy Mary.

"But doesn't will bring this trousers dress out, and every smart woman will be wearing it in Paris before the month is out," Miss Garden said, and the prima donna was right, even if she was radical, for the cable from Paris says that the loose fitting pantalon skirts are the very latest thing and all women who would be in the mode must wear them.

It will surely simplify the suffragette question, for now woman will get the trousers before she gets the ball and it will probably settle her status as a citizen more quickly than amendments to the constitution.

BUSY MONTH FOR POSTOFFICE FORCE

All Incoming and Outgoing Mail Weighed and Classified

LENGTHY GOVERNMENT REPORT MADE

Time of Handling Mail was Also Reported On Figures Give People and Idea of Amount of Work and Time Consumed in Handling the Mails.

The month of May has been a busy one for the local postoffice force. During the entire month each piece of mail, including letters, newspapers, magazines, circulars, articles of merchandise, etc., have been weighed, counted and separated into classes and an accurate list of them prepared for the United States postoffice officials. A small majority of the Charlevoix people realize the amount of mail handled by the postoffice force and the amount of time it takes for its distribution. Below will be found the total number of pieces handled during the month of May, divided into different classes:

INCOMING MAIL

First class: Letters and postal cards, 3,444.
Second class: Newspapers, 13,685; magazines, 2,789; transient, 45.
Third class: Circulars, 4,465; catalogues and advertising matter, 3,986.
Fourth class: Articles of merchandise, 1,008.
Foreign letters, 383.
Registered letters, 184.

OUTGOING MAIL

First class: Letters and postal cards, 4,320.
Second class: Newspapers, 6,473; magazines, 1,272; transient, 94.
Third class: Circulars, 2,442; other third class matter, 4,180.
Fourth class: Articles of merchandise, 1,521.
Foreign letters, 2,008.
Registered letters, 178.

The carriers of the four rural routes had, the same amount of extra work during the month of May, they also having to keep an individual record of the amount of mail handled. We give below only the number of letters delivered and collected by each route during the month, but these figures do not include any mail matter other than letters:

Route No. 1: Letters delivered, 1,083; collected, 732.
Route No. 2: Letters delivered, 1,084; collected, 845.
Route No. 3: Letters delivered, 1,051; collected, 680.
Route No. 4: Letters delivered, 1,322; collected, 931.

The total number of pounds of mail matter delivered and collected by the carrier on Route No. 1 was 320 pounds and 10 ounces, and the amount delivered and collected by each of the other three routes averaged about the same.

The month of May is by no means a fair comparison of the amount of business done in the Charlevoix postoffice, as the records show it to be one of the lightest months in the year. The heaviest incoming and outgoing months are during the months of July, August, September and December, when the amount will average more than double the figures given for the month of May. The stamp sales and other business during this month are also lower than the average month of the year.

A comparison of the figures showing the amount of outgoing and incoming merchandise indicates that mail order houses are not doing a thriving business in Charlevoix and territory surrounding it.

St. Mary's Concert.

Friday evening, June 9, the musical pupils of the Sisters will give a musical entertainment at their hall in the school house. Many numbers are programmed and the entertainment will be one of great interest and will be the best ever held.

The school children will also take part in the entertainment and will render vocal and instrumental solo, etc. Great enthusiasm has been shown by the students and Sisters to put before the public a pleasing program.

LOOKS UP THE LAW

Michigan Anti-Saloon League Now Preparing Publication.

Philly W. Marsh, attorney for the Michigan Anti-Saloon League, is preparing for publication a booklet containing a complete digest of Michigan Supreme court decisions and opinions on state local option laws since 1880, when the first law of the kind was declared constitutional. The publication will be issued late in the summer and will be available for prosecuting attorneys of the state in the fall and later, as local option cases arise in the courts. Various blank forms also will be listed in the book for the guidance of lawyers generally. The purpose of the work is to guide legal procedure in the conduct of local option cases so that needless litigation will not be undertaken or extended through accidental failure to cite proper decisions governing cases. Judge W. L. Carpenter of Detroit is the author of a similar work published by the Michigan Brewers' Association, giving a digest of the Warner-Crompton law.

HELD ANNUAL MEETING

Charlevoix County Odd Fellows Mutual Benefit Association

Officers Elected—Association is in a Thriving Condition.

The annual meeting of the Charlevoix County Odd Fellows Mutual Benefit Ass'n was held at Odd Fellows hall in this city on Monday, May 29, when the annual business was transacted, the following officers were elected for the ensuing year:

President, Oul Nordrum.
Vice-president, R. L. Lorraine, East Jordan.
Secretary, Richard Lewis.
Treasurer, F. E. Wood.
Directors, full term, Wright Ripley; vacancy, two years, Lou Hennrich, Charlevoix; N. S. Niles, full term, Boyne City; Henry C. Holmes, full term, East Jordan.

The society was organized in January 1908, and since its organization has lost but one member. At present the membership numbers one hundred and six and it is the expectation of the members to increase it during the coming year to almost double the present membership. Charlevoix alone has seventy members, and the other two cities in the county are hustling to make a better showing for their respective lodges.

At the meeting East Jordan was represented by R. L. Lorraine, and Boyne City by Ed. Newville, N. S. Niles, A. L. Thompson, E. M. Whiter and J. B. Kirby.

TRACK AND FIELD MEET

Large Crowd Present in Petoskey Saturday.

Petoskey Won Meet With 49 Points, Charlevoix Third With 15.

The northern Michigan inter-scholastic track and field meet held Saturday in Petoskey proved to be the biggest meet ever held in northern Michigan and was attended by a large crowd. Charlevoix track enthusiasts and participants made the trip to Petoskey on the Steamer Missonri, which had been chartered by the Traverse City schools, and were also joined here by a number from East Jordan.

Petoskey won the meet with 49 points, Traverse City second with 32, Charlevoix third with 15, Harbor Springs 11 and East Jordan 1. Taylor was the mainstay for Charlevoix, winning the 100 yard dash in the record time of 11 seconds, also the 220 yard dash and third place in the broad jump, making eleven out of the fifteen points. McGough got second place in the 220 yard dash and third in the 120 yard hurdles, a total of four points. Following is the summary:

One hundred yard dash—Taylor, Charlevoix; Hamill, Petoskey; Newman, Harbor Springs. Time 11 seconds.

Pole vault—Lee and Beatty, Petoskey, tie for first and second place; Robertson, Traverse City. Height 8 feet 3 inches.

500 yard dash—Petoskey; Desmond, Traverse City; Cole, Harbor Springs. Time 2:15.

120 yard hurdles—Beatty, Petoskey; Cleveland, Traverse City; McGough, Charlevoix. Time 15 2/5 seconds.

Shot put—Bucken, Traverse City; Cleveland, Traverse City; Baker, Harbor Springs. Distance 40 feet 9 inches.

60 yard dash—Newman, Harbor Springs; Hamill, Petoskey; Brezina, Traverse City. Time 5 1/5 seconds.

Discus—Bucken, Traverse City; Cleveland, Traverse City; Malpas, East Jordan. Distance 80 feet 9 inches.

220 yard dash—Taylor, Charlevoix; Newman, Harbor Springs; Hamill, Petoskey. Time 21 seconds.

High jump—Lee and Beatty, Petoskey; Cleveland, Traverse City. Height 5 feet 4 1/2 inches.

880 yard dash—Blanchard, Petoskey; Cleveland, Traverse City; Desmond, Traverse City. Time 2 minutes 13 seconds.

220 yard dash—Beatty, Petoskey; McGough, Charlevoix; Cleveland, Traverse City. Time 25 2/5 seconds.

Broad jump—Beatty, Petoskey; Adams, Petoskey; Taylor, Charlevoix. Distance 30 feet.

Relay—Petoskey.

A serious runaway occurred while Mr. and Mrs. Richard Williams of Ironton were on their way to town Saturday. They had reached the hill just beyond the Coulter farm, when in some manner the put holding the shafts came loose, letting the team drop upon the horses' heels, causing it to run away. Mr. Williams was thrown out of the buggy and when picked up was found to have three ribs on the right side broken, and was otherwise badly bruised. Mr. Williams was in the buggy when the horse was stopped and was uninjured, although badly shaken up and frightened.

Mr. Williams was taken to the Coulter farm and medical assistance called, and present indications are that nothing serious will result from the accident.

SUSPICIOUS FIRES

Will be Thoroughly Investigated Under New Law

Commission Will Work With Chiefs of Home Departments

Systematic work to reduce the fire hazards in the communities of the state will be the principal object of Insurance Commissioner C. A. Palmer's new state fire marshal's bureau. Attention also will be given to the investigation of all suspicious fires. At present the department has a suspicious fire under investigation to ascertain whether it was of incendiary origin but the department will devote the greater part of its activities this year to the reduction of fire hazard. Consultation has been had with the fire marshal of Indiana which has a most efficient system in operation and in the maintenance of which the state expends $50,000 annually, so successful has the organization been in improving conditions tending to jeopardize large property interests.

Assistant Fire Marshal H. A. Wolfe has commenced the work of investigation in a number of cities and working with the chief of the fire departments is directing the removal of buildings of which endanger nearby property as well as improving condition and cleanups to accomplish the same object. In addition letters are being sent to fire officials in every community in the state inclosing to them a copy of the law and calling attention to the duties they are required to perform under its supervision.

Fire insurance companies are also being notified and the officials of the inspection bureau have been named as deputies to assist in the inspection work of the department. The law provides broad authority for the department in reducing fire hazards and inspections as soon as they can be made will determine what steps are necessary to better conditions.

This week Mr. Palmer will attend the state firemen's convention at Manistee and will discuss the provisions of the new law with the chiefs. He stated that generally throughout the state the fire chiefs are expressing their approval of the act and are assuring him of their enthusiastic co-operation in making it an efficient remedy which will eliminate many features of the communities exceedingly dangerous to life and property as should a serious blaze get under way.

Mr. Palmer realizes that it is a new feature of state activity and he believes that when the merits of the plan are understood the people generally, it will aid in bringing about a successful enforcement of the sections.

DATES FOR GAME WARREN

Change Will Probably Take Place About July 1.

It is generally understood that on July 1, W. R. Oates, secretary to the governor, will leave the executive office to become state game and fish warden, and that some changes will be made in the executive staff in consequence. Mr. DeFoe, executive clerk, will retain his present position by reason of his preference for the duties of that position, and as secretary of the board of pardons and paroles.

It is well known, however, among those who are familiar with executive office business that Gov. Osborn has a strong liking for Mr. DeFoe, and his ability in keeping the wheels running smoothly in the multitudinous duties and details that are a daily thing to that officer, and that an increased salary will be Mr. DeFoe's portion under the new arrangement by which Mr. DeHull, Travis of Flint, a well known young attorney, will go to Lansing as private secretary, and Grand Rapids Press.

BARREL FACTORY

East Jordan is Soon to Have a Much Needed Plant.

In the years gone by practically all barrels used in this vicinity for shipping apples, etc., have been purchased of outside firms and shipped in.

The A. H. Haight Cooperage & Box Co., realizing the necessity of such a plant in East Jordan have decided to erect a factory for the manufacture of barrels. A tract of land has been purchased adjoining their present plant on the east, and will erect thereon two buildings—one 10x100 feet and one 24x60 feet.

A carload of machinery has been purchased and it is now on its way here. The power used will be an electric motor.

The capacity of the plant will be 1,000 barrels per day and they will be ready for operation about July 1st. With prospects of a bumper crop of apples in this section the demand for barrels will be enormous. Manager Haight will also be prepared to furnish boxes of any description on short notice.—East Jordan Herald.

ORCHARD DEMONSTRATIONS

To Be Held in Various Locations in County June 19 to 24.

Secretary Gibson of Bureau Will Give Evening Addresses on Fruit Culture.

During the week of June 19-24 Charlevoix county will be visited by representatives of the Western Michigan Development Bureau, who will give free demonstrations, showing the correct way of setting out an orchard and the proper care it should be given. The various ways of treating diseased trees, pruning, spraying and the locality of an orchard will be discussed freely by John T. Gibson, secretary of the bureau and C. N. Smith, horticulturist. The representatives of the bureau will be accompanied through the county by vice-president D. S. Payton and others, and will give demonstrations at the following places in the afternoon at 2 o'clock:

St. James, June 19. Demonstration in orchard of Dan T. Gallagher. Evening lecture in St. James hall, Wm. J. Gallagher, chairman.

June 21. Demonstration in orchard of Arthur Woodner. Evening lecture in Maple Grove grange hall, E. E. Strand, chairman.

June 22. Marion Center grange. Demonstration in orchard of Will Withers, south of grange hall. Evening lecture in grange hall, Walter Black, chairman.

June 23. South Arm grange. Demonstration in orchard of Walter Burbank. Evening lecture in grange hall, H. L. Olney, chairman.

June 24. Walloon Lake. Demonstration in orchard of H. S. Jordan. Lecture immediately after demonstration in school house, district No. 4, W. W. Niles, chairman.

Orchard demonstrations will be given each afternoon at 2:00 o'clock evening lecture at 7:30.

It is the wish of the bureau that everyone interested in the betterment of fruit raising attend the lectures to be given each evening at 7:30. It will be well worth your time, for practical points will be freely and clearly discussed.

Money Lenders Hope to Find Measure Unconstitutional

New Act Prevents Splitting up or Renewing of Loans to Get Greater Charge.

There will go into effect August 2 a state law enacted at the last legislative session which imposes upon pawnbrokers and others, who loan money on personal property, and on salaries, conditions so rigid that some of those who make a specialty of making loans on salaries and on household goods have consulted lawyers about testing in the courts the constitutionality of the act.

The new law was drafted and its passage directed through the legislature by Representative Ward Copley of Detroit. It is devised to stop all of the abuses of this kind of loan business, mostly in the nature of extortionate rates of interest and other charges, abuses that have been periodically exposed in newspapers. Every known way by which chattel mortgage men and pawnbrokers have evaded laws in this respect is blocked by the new method, so Representative Copley explains.

The new act puts those who loan on salaries, on household goods and like goods, and pawnbrokers, in one class, whereas the acts of 1907 put pawnbrokers in a class by themselves, and chattel mortgage and salary loan men in another class. Representative Copley explained the improvement the law makes over the two old laws in these words:

"The 1907 act relating to salary and chattel loans allowed a charge of 2 per cent a month, but did not regulate loans where no mortgage security was taken. That is in cases where the borrower was supposedly liable to arrest for violating the terms of the loan. Neither did it provide reporting to the police property left as security for a loan.

"The result was that the provisions of the act were so weak that there was practically no more restraint on lenders than if no law existed. It provided that they should take out a license annually, the amount to be fixed by the city council. The license clerk at Detroit police headquarters tells me that not one of them had a license or even applied for one. They simply ignored the law. The chattel mortgage and salary loaners did a pawnbroking business, and pawnbrokers a chattel mortgage business, and both took the highest rate of interest they could get.

"The 1906 pawnbrokers act limited the rate of interest to 7 per cent per annum, and a 3 per cent addendum. The pawnbrokers construed this to be 10 per cent a month and some have been collecting even more.

"The new act compels all those who loan money on goods, salaries, jewelry in pawn, or any kind of personal property or where no security is given, in any other way, to take out a license and file a bond for $1,000 to be approved by the city council. The rate of interest is limited to 2 per cent per month for amounts of $20 and under, and 10 1/2 per cent on sums over $100. There will also be allowed a fee of $1 to $2 for service in examining the security.

"The new act prohibits the splitting up or renewing of loans previously brought in or prescribed by the law, and it prohibits charges for removal or transfers, final score of 13 to 11 in favor of the within one year."

Webster's NEW INTERNATIONAL Dictionary, (G. & C. Merriam Co., Springfield, Mass.) surpasses the old International as much as that book exceeded its predecessor. On the old foundation a new superstructure has been built. The reconstruction has been carried on through many years by a large force of trained workers, under the supervision of Dr. W. T. Harris, former United States Commissioner of Education, and reinforced by many eminent specialists. The definitions have been rearranged and amplified. The number of terms defined has been more than doubled. The etymology, synonyms, pronunciation, have received unsparring scholarly labor. The language of English literature for over seven centuries, and the terminology of the arts and sciences, and the every-day speech of street, shop, and household, are presented with fullness and clearness. In size of vocabulary, in richness of general information, and in convenience of consultation, the book sets a new mark in lexicography.

WESTERN MICHIGAN FAVORED

Weather Bureau Figures Long Season Between Frosts.

Practical facts in regard to the times when killing frosts have visited this section of the state are found in a booklet issued at Washington by the weather department. The figures show that western Michigan is tempered by the waters of Lake Michigan to an even larger extent than has been claimed.

The figures of the bureau show that the average date of the last killing frost here is from May 1 to 5 while the average date of the first killing frost in autumn is from October 1 to 5. In extreme seasons there have been frosts as late as June 1, and as early as September 20. This makes the average length of the crop season for western Michigan approximately 160 days as compared with 140 days in northern Michigan, and almost as short a season for other parts of the state situated further inland. Lake Michigan acts a kind of a storm fence, which is of great value to farmers and fruit growers.

I have a few bushels of beans to put out on contract.

W. M. Development Bureau Notes.

A big Western Michigan Development meeting will be held at Glen Arbor, Leelanau county, on Wednesday, June 14, at the farm of D. H. Day, president of the bureau. This meeting will consist of an orchard demonstration and talks by officers of the bureau. The orchard work is in charge of C. E. Smith, horticulturist, and inspirational speeches will be given by President Day of the bureau, John L. Gibson, secretary, and F. A. Mitchell, chairman of the finance committee. The day is to be made a picnic day for the west half of Leelanau county and the farmers and fruit growers are invited to come and take part in the meeting.

A meeting of the executive meeting committee of the western Michigan Development bureau has been called for Thursday, June 8. At this time the work of preparing the 1911 illustrated magazine, "Western Michigan Fruit With Flavor," will be begun and one or two new lines of work taken up. Plans will also be made at this time for the exhibits promised for the meeting of the Western Michigan Press Club at Cadillac in September and the apple show in Grand Rapids in November.

Development bureau meetings are to be held in Charlevoix county as follows:

Monday, June 19, St. James.

Wednesday, June 21, Maple Grove grange hall.

Thursday, June 22, Marion Center grange hall.

Friday, June 23, South Arm grange hall.

Saturday, June 24, Walton Lake.

Advertisements telling about the merits of western Michigan as a fruit growing section are now appearing in the more important farm publications and many persons who heretofore have been ignorant of the resources of this wonderful region are beginning to take notice.

Deering New Ideal Vertical Lift Mower

The Deering New Ideal Vertical Lift Mower is designed for use on rough, stony ground. It does the work surely and effectively where a straight lift machine would be handicapped by unusual conditions and hampered by the straight lift construction.

The New Ideal gives excellent results in the field, no matter how heavy or tangled the hay may be. At the same time its easy running qualities enables the farmer to cut his hay quickly, effectively, and without injuring his horses. The machine is well balanced, which greatly reduces the neck weight on the team. In price, we are as low as the lowest. All we ask is a chance to explain the good qualities of the Deering to you.

Heaven help the man who imagines he can dodge enemies trying to please everybody? If such an individual succeeds, pass him over this way that we may have a look at his mortal remains ere he vanishes away, for surely this earth cannot be his abiding place. Now we do not infer that one should be going through this world trying to find beams to knock and thump his head against, disputing every man's opinion, fighting, elbowing and crowding all who differ from him. That, again, is another extreme. Other people have their opinions, so have you. Don't fall into the error of supposing they will respect you more for turning your coat every day to match the color of theirs.

EDWIN S. PRATT

Prominent Traverse City Attorney Died Monday

Was Well Known in This City, and a Leader of the Northern Michigan Bar.

Edwin S. Pratt, a prominent attorney of Traverse City, and well known in this city, died at his home in that city Monday morning. Mr. Pratt had been failing in health for two or three years, but had been able to attend to his office work until about a week ago.

Mr. Pratt was born in Deerfield, Livingston county, April 23, 1841, and located in Traverse City, May 22, 1896, and has until the time of his death, practiced law in that city. For forty-five years he has been among the leading members of the bar in northern Michigan, and his great ability has been recognized by all.

Politically, Mr. Pratt was originally a republican, but soon after going to Traverse City he identified himself with the democratic party. He was a candidate of his party on numerous occasions locally, and in 1880 was the democratic candidate in the ninth congressional district, for congress. He was also twice a candidate for circuit judge in this district, and served as prosecuting attorney and circuit court commissioner in his home county.

The funeral services were held today (Wednesday) from the family residence in Traverse City.

RE-DISTRICTS STATE

Michigan Telephone Company Makes Several Important Changes.

The Michigan State Telephone company has re-districted the state and June 1, Grand Rapids became the headquarters of a much larger territory comprising all of the thirty-one western counties, from the Indiana state line to the Straits of Mackinac. The new district serves over 60,000 and is readily developing.

Under the new management C. E. Wilde, who has been division manager, becomes district commercial manager.

There will be four districts in the state. Detroit will be headquarters of one; Grand Rapids, Saginaw and Marquette the others. Several new long distance copper circuits are being brought into Grand Rapids at the present time and the wire mileage of this part of the system will be materially increased in western Michigan this summer. This includes additional circuits to Kalamazoo and Chicago and between Grand Rapids and Muskegon, Traverse City, Petoskey and Mackinaw City.

Hon. N. W. Burdick died of tubercular trouble at his home in Mancelona, Wednesday morning at 11:15 o'clock. He caught a severe cold while at Lansing last winter and when the legislature adjourned six weeks ago, came home sick, but was confined to his bed only two weeks before his death. Everything that medical skill and care could do was all in vain to save him, and he peacefully passed away.

Mr. Burdick was a man of considerable ability and has filled many positions of trust and always with credit to himself. He was a faithful member of the Congregational church of Mancelona and a staunch member of the Masonic order.

The funeral was held from the house, Sunday at 2 p. m., with a sermon by Rev. Ollis. The funeral and the services at the cemetery were in charge of the Masons and conducted with the impressive ceremonies of that order.

The Hon. Charles P. Light, former state commissioner of public roads and now special representative of the American Association for Highway Improvements is to assist the Western Michigan Development bureau this fall in carrying on a "Better Roads" campaign through the Western Michigan territory. The plan is being worked out in this campaign calls for a special train to make the several western Michigan points that the road enthusiasts may get directly at the people.

Surveyors in the service of the G. R. & I. R. R. have completed running lines and establishing grades for the construction of six miles of track from Kila into the Ward estate and to the timber recently purchased by the A. E. Anderson firm of Cadillac. About 1,500 acres of timber land is in the tract and it is practically a virgin forest.

The Western Michigan Development bureau is in receipt of a letter from a man at Samara, Russia, asking for information in regard to western Michigan land prices and fruit culture. The writer of the letter is in this country and was practically struck with the fruit from Michigan that he saw in Chicago and other markets and thinks that he would like to come here and buy a fruit farm and engage in raising apples and other fruit.—Record-Eagle.

Harry Price of East Jordan has been awarded the contract by the board of supervisors for the addition to be built on the county poor house in Antrim county. The contract call for the building to be done by October. Mr. Price will receive $2,500 for his work.

The printing committee of the Western Michigan Development bureau held a meeting in Chicago last week for the purpose of going over the plans for the new 1912 booklet which will be issued in the fall. This booklet will be more elaborate next year than it was last and include a greater amount of information relating to the western Michigan counties.

A. R. Potts of the Michigan Agricultural college stopped over in the city last week on his way from Central Lake, where he had conducted an alfalfa meeting for the farmers of that section. He reports that a great interest is being shown among western Michigan farmers in alfalfa and sand vetch as cover crops and expects that in a few years these valuable forage crops will be generally grown on the light lands. Over 500 new growers were recorded last year and it is expected that 1,000 more will begin this year.—Record-Eagle.

Nels Hansen, millionaire lumberman is planning to give the state 7,000 acres of land along the Au Sable river near Grayling for a state park.

Kalkaska will not have to import teachers for the rural school this year as the home supply equals the demand, thanks to that class of fourteen, eager, earnest and well qualified young teachers just graduated from her county normal.

Thomas Hansberger, of Monroe, Michigan, has just shipped 135 sheep and sixteen head of cattle to his 900-acre ranch on the shores of Arbutus Lake, Grand Traverse county. He now has 200 acres of his place seeded to timothy and expects to use this to fatten the sheep and cattle. He will ship both before winter sets in and expects a handsome profit from the increase for the season.

A Farmer's Wise Remark on Seeing a Great Invention

In the department called, "Mount People" in the June Woman's Home Companion, is the following paragraph about Angus Campbell, the man who invented the machine that picks cotton: A farmer, when he saw the machine the first time said very wisely: "It will put the children to school."

"Twenty-five years ago a Chicago pattern-maker went on a pleasure trip to Texas, where he saw hundreds of men, women and children laboriously picking cotton and dragging their slowly-filling sacks behind them as they toiled through the hot fields. Like others before him, he wondered if a machine might not be devised to do this work better, and to accomplish in the south a marvel paralleling that which the great grain harvesters have worked in the wheat-fields of the west. Others have tried and failed, as he also might have failed had he not been of the persevering Scotch strain guaranteed by his name Angus Campbell. Comparatively, the grain harvesters presented a simple problem, for grain ripens uniformly and the entire field may be cut at once. But the cotton-bolls mature at different times. A cotton harvester, therefore, must be a machine that thinks—a machine with sufficient discrimination to pick out all the lint from the ripened bolls, yet to pass over those not yet matured, leaving the delicate plant unharmed. Mr. Campbell wrestled with the problem for twenty years and suffered many discouragements and failures before he at last devised a wonderful contrivance with countless delicate fingers that will really pick cotton. It is hard to realize all that this invention may mean to the cotton growing states. That it will cut down the cost of harvesting cotton two-thirds is a moderate estimate. And, as a farmer's wife thankfully observed, 'You don't have to cook for it.' Indirectly it will enormously increase the natural production of the chief export staple, and will save the southern farmers tens of millions of dollars each year. Moreover, where farmers have actually been compelled to limit their cotton acreage because of the difficulty of securing labor in the picking season, this over-ready servant will enable them to increase their crops without fear, perhaps doubling the value of their lands. Better still, it will release from the drudgery of the fields thousands who should be otherwise employed."

A STEADY DRAIN

Sick Kidneys Weaken the Whole Body—Make You Ill, Languid and Depressed.

Sick kidneys weaken the body through the continual drainage of life-giving albumen from the blood into the urine, and the substitution of poisonous uric acid that goes broadcast through the system, sowing the seeds of disease. Loss of albumen causes weakness, languor, depression. Uric poisoning causes rheumatic pain, nervousness, nausea, cramps in the back, gravel and kidney stones. The proper treatment is a kidney treatment, and the best remedy is Doan's Kidney Pills. Here is good proof in the following testimonials.

R. Kluge, 40 South D. St., Cheboygan, Mich., says: "I consider Doan's Kidney Pills far superior to any other kidney medicine. I have ever taken. My back was very painful and I had other symptoms of kidney trouble. Doan's Kidney Pills relieved the backache and other difficulties, in fact, helped me in every way. I am always glad to recommend Doan's Kidney Pills and I willingly give you permission to refer to me at any time as one who praises them highly."

by his manner. A muffled "How do you do?" from Angie and a half-strangled echo of the salutation from the other were barely audible. But, hearing them, he bowed again, separately to each.

"Good afternoon," he said and waited in an inquiring pose.

"This is Mr. Duncan, isn't it?"
inquired Josie, controlling herself.

"Yes, and you are Miss Lockwood, I f'm not mistaken."

Renewed glances prefaced her "Oh, how did you know?"

"Could any one remain two weeks in Radville and not hear of Miss Lockwood?"

The shot told famously. "How nice of you," Mr. Duncan, I want you to meet my friend Miss Tutbill."

"I've had the honor of admiring Miss Tutbill from a distance," Duncan assured the younger woman. And "She'll bure up" he feared secretly, watching the configuration of blouses that she displayed. "Just think of getting away with a line of muck like that!
Harry was right after all. This is a country town, all right."

"And—and are you working here, Mr. Duncan?" Josie pursued.

"I'm supposed to be. I'm afraid I don't know the business very well as yet."

"Oh, that's awfully nice," Angie thought.

He thanked her humbly.

"We didn't expect to see you here," Josie assured him. "We just thought we'd like some soda."

"Soda?" he parroted, horrified. He cast a glance askance at the tawdry fountain. "Let's see, how d'you work the infernal thing?" he asked himself, utterly bewildered.

"Yes," Angie chimed in. "It's so warm this afternoon we—"

"I've got to put it through somehow," he thought savagely, and aloud,
"Yes, certainly," he said and smiled winningly. "Will you be pleased to step this way?"

Out of the corners of his eyes he detected the amused look that passed between the girls. "Oh, very well," he said beneath his breath. "You may laugh, but you asked for soda, and

"Oh, don't say that," he pleaded.
soda you shall have, my dears, if you die of it." He put himself behind the counter with an air of great determination and leaned upon it with both hands outspread until he realized that this was the pose of a grocery man. "What'll you have?" he demanded peevishly. "Er—that is—I mean, would you prefer vanilla or—soda?"

A faint antiphonal answered him:
"I hate vanilla."

"And so do I."

"Oh, don't say that!" he pleaded. "Of course you know there's vanilla and vanilla. Ah, some vanilla I know is detestable, but when you get a really one vintage—ah—imported vanilla, it's quite another matter—ah—particularly at this season of the year."

His confusion was becoming painful.

"Oh, is it?" asked Josie helpfully. Her eyes dwelt upon his with a couiding expression which he later characterized as a baby stare, and he was promptly reduced to babbling idiocy.

"Indeed it is; no doubt whatever,
Miss Lockwood. Especially just now, you know—ah—after the back season—ah—I mean, when the weather is—in a way—you might put it, vanilla weather."

"But I like chocolate best," Angie pouted. And he lifted her consumed, ly for the moment.

"Very well," Josie told him sweetly
"I'll have the vanilla."

He thanked her with unnecessary
effusion and turned to inspect the glassware. "There could be no mistake about the right jar, however;
there was nothing but vanilla, and,
seeing it, he removed the metal cap and, indeed, it is before the girls. With less color he discovered a whiskey glass and put it beside the bottle, with a corrid wave of the hand

A pause ensued. Duncan was still log fatuously, serene in the belief that he had solved the problem—the way to serve soda was to make them help themselves. It was very simple, only they didn't. With a start he became sensible that they were eying him strangely.

"You—ah—wanted vanilla, did you not?"

"Yes, thanks, vanilla," Josie agreed.
"Well, that's it," he said firmly, indicating the jar and the glass.

Josie giggled. "But I don't want to drink it clear. You put the sirup in the glass, you know, and then the soda."

"Oh, I see! You want to make a biggie—ah—a long drink of it. Ah yes!" He procured a glass of the regulation size. "Now I understand." A pause. "If you'll be good enough to help yourself to the sirup."

"No, you do it," Josie pleaded.

"Certainly!" He lifted the whiskey glass and the jar and began to pour.

"If you'll just say when."

"What? Oh, that's enough, thank you!"

"If I ever get out of this fix I'll blow the whole shooting match," he promised himself, holding the glass beneath the faucet and adding nervously with the valves. For a moment he fancied the tank must be empty, for nothing came of his efforts. Then abruptly the fixture seemed to explode. "A yep-er!" he cried, huddled with the dash of carbonated water and sirup in his face, while he fumbled furiously with the valves.

As unexpectedly as it had begun the show ceased. He put down the glass, found his handkerchief and mopped his dripping face. When able to see again he discovered the younger woman leaning against one of the showcases, weak with laughter but at a safe remote.

"Oh, soda's so strong, you know," he unapoloized. "But if you'll stay where you are I'll try again."

Warned by experience, he worked at the machine and, finally, finally producing a thin, spluttering trickle. Beatin-ing with triumph, he looked up. "I think it's safe now," he suggested. "I seem to have it under control."

Angie and Josie returned, torn by distress, but unable to resist the fascination of the stranger in our village.
And there's no denying the boy was good looking and a gentleman by birth and education.

He had filled one glass and was thirsting it with sirup, when he caught again that confiding smile of Josie's glad upon him as the beams of a noonday sun.

"Haven't we seen you at church, Mr.
Duncan?" she said prettily.

"I think perhaps you may have," he conceded. "I have seen you both."

The second glass (for he was determined that Angie should not escape) took up all his attention for an instant. "Do you have to go, too?" he inquired out of this deep preoccupation.

"Where?"

"To the bank," Josie told him sweetly.
"I'll have the vanilla."

He thanked her with unnecessary
effusion and turned to inspect the glassware. "There could be no mistake about the right jar, however;
there was nothing but vanilla, and,
seeing it, he removed the metal cap
and, indeed, it is before the girls. With

MUCH FOOD FOR FUTURE THOUGHT

Baccalaureate Sermon Delivered by Rev. H. A. Putnam

HELD AT CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH

Topic, "The Supreme Test"—Interesting and Instructive

Church Crowded With Friends and Relatives of Young People Who Graduate

Sunday evening Rev. H. A. Putnam preached the baccalaureate sermon for the graduating class of the high school at the Congregational church, which proved to be both instructive and interesting, as well as furnishing much food for future thought. The edifice was crowded with friends and relatives of the young people who are about to leave their studies and take their places in the world. The subject of his address, "The Supreme Test," we take pleasure in reproducing:

Text—Exodus 25: 40. "And see that thou make them after their pattern, which hath been showed thee in the Mount." This language was addressed to Moses and related to the Tabernacle and its furnishings. The work of constructing the Tabernacle had been committed to the care of Moses. The plans had been revealed to him in detail on the Mount. His work consisted in carefully following the plan. To substitute any idea of his own in the place of that which had been given to him would lower the design from the level of the divine mind to that of the human.

"This represents the real task that is for men in all ages, it is our task today. The great achievements of our time in the line of discovery and invention are due to the fact that men have discovered God's pattern in steam, electricity and machinery. The principals and forces upon which the industrial triumphs of our time are built are as old as the universe, but because men did not understand them they scarcely began to use them until the latter half of the nineteenth century. This spirit of progress in all of our life can be realized as man goes on in the further discovery of God's pattern for human life."

"How great is the life that opens before us as emphasized by this truth. It is our privilege to travel along the highways marked out by the divine mind. Human limitations are to be cast aside and we are to find our lives in the greatness of God's own planning. Special emphasis is placed upon this by two facts: First, that we are created in God's image, and secondly, in powers of growth in a world of marvelous resources."

"It is apparent from this view of life that our ideals should be from above, and we should address ourselves to life's problems, realizing that we are called into large things. We do great injustice to ourselves and violence to the plan of God by fixing narrow limitations to our lives. We are apt to plan only for that which has already been attained. Looking upon the best that men have realized in our ambitious moments we sometimes hope to have a small share in like attainments. We ought to look for a life beyond that which has yet come to man. To live all together in the realm of that which has been attained, is to tie ourselves to the past, to make progress impossible for the race so far as our part is concerned, and to render our own development a very narrow one. In the past men have looked for changes that appeared impossible to many. The result has been that slavery has passed away, temperance has made rapid strides in advance, and the industrial world has been revolutionized. Let us apply the lesson to ourselves personally."

"The time to get our vision and catch our inspiration is not in our lowest moments, but when lifted to the point of noblest view and when we are under the influence of some great purpose. Moses did not receive his conception of the plan for the Tabernacle until he had gone up into the Mount where God could speak to his soul as he could not do on the common levels of life."

Young people, you are called to a great life, but what it will be to you will depend upon what you are and what you do. It is not the power of circumstances which will shape your future so much as your own personality. If you make the most of your selves, you may succeed where others fail."

"Dr. Hillis tells of the wonderful development of the wire factory at Cortland, N. Y. Two brothers went into the hardware business in the village. A customer, of theirs failing, they were obliged to take for the debt, an old hand loom for weaving wire for a flour sieve. It seemed impossible that anything could be done with the loom. They were hundreds of miles from the seashore, which meant heavy freight bills, hundreds of miles from the coal fields, a thousand miles from the iron mines. But with determination to succeed they went on. Now they have a business employing fifteen hundred workmen. Dr. Hillis says: 'I saw them take a billet of steel six feet long and one foot square, weighing sixteen hundred pounds. When the billet came out at the

FAIR DATES NAMED

Charlevoix County Agricultural Society Hold Fair Sept. 12-13-14-15

Superintendents for Various Divisions Named
By Laws Changed

The annual meeting of the board of directors of the Charlevoix County Agricultural society was held in the Russell House at East Jordan, Tuesday, June 6, and the plans for the county fair to be held Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, September 12, 13, 14 and 15, were gotten under way.

The executive committee reported what was being done in the way of improvement at the fair grounds and the action of the committee was approved.

In the matter of premiums to be offered for exhibits, a change was made in the division devoted to sheep. This year premiums will be given on pens of yearlings and two-year-olds.

Another departure from the usual practice was the naming of but one superintendent for each division. In cases where help is needed an assistant may be employed. Following is a list of superintendents named:

Div. A—Nat Burns.
Div. B—Elmer Ingalls.
Div. C—M. J. Staley.
Div. D—M. J. Staley.
Div. E—Robert Price.
Div. F—Robert Price.
Div. G—Jas. Meggison.
Div. H—Jno. A. Newville.
Div. I—Mrs. Robert Price.
Div. J—Mrs. M. Ruhlberg.
Div. K—Mrs. Robert Price.
Div. L—E. B. Ward.
Div. M—J. H. Milford.

The by-laws were changed so that the election of officers will occur on the last two days of the fair.

Those who were in attendance at the meeting Tuesday were H. J. Hipp, president, A. B. Nicholas, Jr., secretary, M. Ruhlberg, treasurer and H. L. Olney, J. H. Lanway, Nat Burns, Elmer Ingalls, Wm. Mears, Robert Price, J. A. Newville, Richard Lewis, E. B. Ward and M. J. Staley, directors.

POMONA GRANGE MEETING

Met at Marion Center Grange and was Well Attended

Charlevoix Pomona grange met in regular session with Marion Center grange Friday and Saturday of last week. Although it was a very busy season of the year the attendance was large at all sessions.

Friday was devoted to business. The grange decided to build a hall on the fair grounds at East Jordan. Every grange in the county will be asked to contribute toward the building.

C. H. Bramble of Tecumseh, state speaker, gave a very interesting address on Canadian reciprocity. In the evening the degree of Pomona was conferred on fifteen candidates. Saturday was an open meeting and several friends from Charlevoix were present and took part in the program as published last week. Mr. Bramble also delivered an address.

The next meeting will be held with Hoyne Valley grange, August 10.

WILL GIVE APPLE SHOW

Development Bureau Will Unite
With Grand Rapids Press

Will Issue 100,000 Copies of Booklet—Same Cover as Last Year

At the meeting of the executive committee of the Western Michigan Development Bureau held at Traverse City last Wednesday it was decided to accept the invitation of the Grand Rapids Press to join with that paper in putting on an apple show in Grand Rapids in November. Mr. Taylor of the Press was present and made the proposition to the directors and it looked so good that his proposition was adopted after a careful investigation into the subject.

This show is a new one to Michigan and it will be modeled upon the plan of the Spokane show, which has gained world-wide fame for its splendid exhibits. It is believed that the Michigan show can be made an even greater success than that of the west on account of this state having a superior quality of fruit and at present being in the center of the apple belt of the world. There will be a revenue connected with the show, but for the first year it is probable that the receipts will not be sufficient to meet the expense, but the directors believe that money expended in this way will be well expended in advertising. The entire cost of the show will be much less in the end than has been put in the Chicago exhibit in any one year. The responsibility for the show will be divided equally between the Grand Rapids Press and the development bureau.

A special committee consisting of John L. Gibson, R. F. Church, Joseph Gerber, H. J. Gray and D. H. Day was appointed to take charge of the work of putting on the show.

At this meeting it was decided to offer the same premiums as last year at the Cadillac fair and to make an exhibit there. It was also voted to make a creditable exhibit at the Interstate fair to be held at Kalamazoo, September 4-7.

The question of publishing the magazine was discussed and it was decided to issue 100,000 copies of a 40-page booklet besides the cover, which will be the same as the one used last year.

DEATH CALLED MOTHER AND BABE

Mrs. Florence Pardee, Who was Formerly a Resident of This City

One of the saddest events which has occurred for some time was the death of Mrs. Florence Pardee and her infant child, which occurred last Friday morning at her home in Springvale, Emmet county, where she has resided since her marriage four years ago to Carlo Pardee of that village. In addition to the husband, the deceased leaves a son, Wesley, who is two years of age.

The deceased was twenty-three years of age and was a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Nixon formerly of Charlevoix but now of Boyne City and is a sister of Mrs. Lee R. Smith of this city and Mrs. Will Neggison of Ironton.

Mrs. Pardee was a graduate of the county normal class of 1900, and her early demise has caused deep sorrow among her many friends here, by whom she was held in high regard.

The remains were taken to Petoskey Friday for burial.

BOYNE CITY AFTER DOGS

Passes Ordinance to Muzzle Them the Year Round

The city council of Boyne City, at their last meeting passed an ordinance that is meant to do away with dog fights in the streets and also the liability of any one getting injured by these animals at any time. The ordinance will take effect in twenty days and reads that all dogs must be muzzled and also wear a tag the whole year, unless the animals are tied up at home. If a dog is found upon the street without a tag or a muzzle any time during the year it will be impounded and after a period shot.

Charlevoix has had no expensive experience with the dog problem, and will undoubtedly pass more stringent laws regarding the care and muzzling of them than is in force at the present time.

TO BOOM STATE

State Immigration Bureau to Take Active Part

Will Have Representatives in East to Urge Settlers to Come to Michigan

Operations to induce settlers to join the ranks of the home owners in this state are to be instituted by the state immigration bureau of which Commissioner A. C. Carton was placed in charge.

There are about 10,000,000 acres of wild land in the state Mr. Carton says, and of this amount about 7,000,000 acres can be transformed into good agricultural lands, while the remaining 3,000,000 acres are suitable only for forestation purposes pending the time when some other use is found for them.

Friends of Mr. Carton consider him exceptionally well fitted for the duties of his new position. He is thoroughly familiar with all sections of Michigan, the various soils and the methods which are being employed in farming, fruit raising and other agricultural pursuits. In addition Mr. Carton is possessed of unbounded enthusiasm for Michigan interest and its opportunities. He can boast Michigan by the rod or mile and has a wealth of information to make good his arguments.

Besides this he recently has been west into some of the boom lands out there and the advantages Michigan possesses over that country Mr. Carton knows and appreciates to their fullest extent.

Mr. Carton says that in giving the population figures of the state every bit of information sent out by the state will be absolutely accurate and settlers will be protected from boomers who attempt to sell them worthless lands.

He expects to work in harmony with the three big development associations of the state and aid them wherever possible and have their assistance in doing things for the state.

The railroads also are expected to join in the work and see to it that their eastern representatives are starting good settlers this way.

These activities are to be instituted at once and Commissioner Carton hopes to have a good report to render a year from now, showing that the state's resources are being developed and its wealth and population increasing accordingly.

STRUCK BY LIGHTNING

Home of William Withers of Marion Shaken
Up by Bolt

During the thunder storm Sunday morning the farm home of William Withers of Marion was struck by lightning and although not much damage was done, the inmates were badly frightened.

The bolt entered the house on the telephone line, badly singeing the siding and entirely burning off the wires. From there it went all through the house. In a room occupied by Mr. Withers' son, Clarence, it picked up and drove a steel pen and holder, which was laying on the dresser, into the wall on the opposite side of the room. In the kitchen it ran about the room on the stove pipe and range and made its exit by way of the water pipes which connect the water tank in this house to the wind-mill.

Altogether it was a very narrow escape from serious damage.

HONORS FOR OSBORN

Michiganensis for 1911 is Dedicated to the Governor

Governor Osborn has been honored by the senior members of the University of Michigan by the Michiganensis, the annual publication of the class, being dedicated to him. In the front of the book is a fine portrait of the governor and on another page a sentence which reads:

"As an expression of the admiration and respect of the senior class, we dedicate this book to Hon. Chase S. Osborn as a friend of the university."

NEWSPAPERS FAVOR IT

Polls Shows 3 to 1 in Favor of Reciprocity Agreement

The Chicago Tribune publishes the result of a poll of newspapers in 22 of the central, western, south-western, northwestern and Pacific states on the question of approving the Canadian Reciprocity agreement. To more than 10,000 newspapers, representing every shade of political opinion, this question was submitted:

"Are you in favor of the approval by congress of the reciprocity agreement with Canada negotiated by President Taft?"

The replies numbered 4,003 of which 4,240 were definite expression of opinion. Of these 3,113 were in favor of the agreement and 1,127 against it—nearly a three-to-one, shattering the claims of the foes of reciprocity.

Michigan showed about the national average, the state poll being 154 to 68 in favor of reciprocity. North Dakota was the only state to show an adverse majority.

PRAYER OF THE HORSE

Lover of Horses Calls Attention to Their Care and Needs

Some Suggestions Worthy of Attention to All Who Handle Them

A COURIER reader requests publication of the following and suggests that it be strictly observed by owners of horses and teamsters in this vicinity:

To thee, my master, I offer my prayer: Feed, water and care for me; and when the day's work is done, provide me with shelter and a clean, dry bed. Always be kind to me. Pet me sometimes, that I may serve you the more gladly and learn to love you. Do not jerk the reins, and do not whip me when going up hill. Never strike, beat or kick me when I do not understand what you want, but give me a chance to understand you. Watch me, and if I fail to do your bidding see if something is not wrong with my harness or feet.

Do not overload me or hitch me where water will drip on me. Keep me, well shod. Examine my teeth when I do not eat; I may have an ulcerated tooth, and that, you know, is painful. Do not tie or check my head in an unnatural position or take away my best defense against flies and mosquitoes by cutting off my mane or tail.

I cannot tell you when I am thirsty, so give me clean, cool water often. I cannot tell you in words when I am sick, so watch me and by signs you may know my condition. Give me all the possible shade from the hot sun, and put a blanket on me not when I am working, but when I am standing in the cold. Never put a frosty bit in my mouth, first warm it by holding it in your hands.

I try to carry you and your burdens without a murmur, and wait patiently for you long hours of the day and night. Without the power to choose my shoes or path, I sometimes fall on the hard pavements, and I must be ready at any time to lose my life in your service.

And finally, O my master, when my useful strength is gone, do not turn me out to starve or freeze, nor sell me to some human brute to be slowly tortured and starved to death, but do thou, my master, take my life in the kindest way and your God will reward you here and hereafter. Amen.

ELK'S CONVENTION

Successful Meeting at Traverse City—Geo. G.
Covell, President

Last week the state Elk's convention was held at Traverse City and it was one of the largest and most successful meetings ever held in the state.

George B. Covell of Traverse City was elected president of the association and Saginaw was selected for the next place of meeting.

Grand Rapids won the first prize on ritualistic contest. Those who attended the convention from here were: Messrs. Shanahan, Finck, Washburn, Ensey, Hammond, Adams, Parsons, Baker, Nordrum, Ward, Miller, Conter and Padlock, who are members of Potawatomi Lodge No. 625.

A GOOD THING FOR THE FARMERS

Reciprocity Favored by Governor
Hoard and Others

HE SAYS IT IS A POLITICAL FIGHT.

Farmers Prosper Best When Manufacturer Prospers

Effect of Reciprocity in His Opinion Will Promote the Business Interest of Both Countries

Last week in Chicago, at a meeting of the Western Economic society, a day was given to the discussion of "Canadian Reciprocity." Among those who took prominent parts in the discussion were President Taft, Prof. H. P. Willis of George Washington university and Prof. E. V. Robinson of the University of Minnesota. A paper prepared by Ex-Governor Hoard of Wisconsin, who was unable to attend, declared that most of the opposition to reciprocity was based on politics and that reciprocity would help the farmers. His statement says:

"Back of all this confusing cry of clamoring politicians; of high protectionists on one hand, and the insurgents looking for political advantage to their group on the other, lies the great recollection with me that always has the farmer prospered best when the manufacturer prospered best; when the great army of workmen were employed and their families consuming largely of the farmer's food. Never once have I seen agriculture prosper when labor was idle. For that I have faith reciprocity with Canada will stimulate the demand for the products of labor this side of the line, and, as day follows night, will help the farmers."

"Already have the farmers been given a taste of declining prices for their food products. Do they like it? Do they want more of it? Then let them follow the counsel of those politicians who are fighting President Taft for political purposes only, and in my opinion they will get a belly full of it."

"Surely, we as farmers, ought to have enough common sense to know a patriotic president when we see him. We ought to know which side of our own bread is buttered. We ought to know that our interests and prosperity are indissolubly bound up with the general interest of the whole country, and that anything that promotes the consumer's ability to purchase our food is a play into our own hands."

"If we do not know these things—if we have studied the economic history of our country so little that we are ignorant of its lessons, then all I can say is that we are mighty poor farmers and unworthy of the interests we are called on to defend. I wish I could get the farmers of the country to see that most of this opposition to reciprocity is based on politics and mighty little of it on any regard whatever for their future welfare. Already the business interests of the country are beginning to show signs of shrinkage and suffering because of the assaults of these contending politicians."

"The farmers of the land must carry a steady hand. They must hark back to the lessons of the past. They must see their true position in relation to all the other industries of the country. They must see that the primary thing to do is to promote the purchasing power of the consumer and not allow themselves to be hoodwinked into opposition to that great basic proposition."

"The effect of reciprocity in my opinion will be to promote the business interests of both countries. In this the farmers must not stand aloof. If they do, the day of their sore punishment is not far off, in my judgment. As a farmer, I am not at all afraid of letting the above principle of reciprocity have free course run, and be glorified."

STATE CROP REPORT

Condition of Wheat in the State is Ninety-One

Other Crops in Good Condition—Winter Apples Poor

The average condition of wheat in the state is 91, in the southern counties 90, in the central counties and upper peninsula 96, and in the northern counties 87.

On May 1 the condition of wheat was reported as follows: State 93, southern counties and upper peninsula 95, central counties 92 and northern counties 87.

The per cent of wheat sown will be plowed up because winter killed is 3 in the state, 1 in the southern and central counties and 7 in the northern counties and the upper peninsula. The damage by Hessian fly is 5 in the state, 8 in the southern counties, 2 in the central and northern counties and none in the upper peninsula. The damage by Hessian fly in the southern counties is the principal cause of the decrease in condition of wheat as reported on May 1st.

The total number of bushels of wheat marketed by farmers in May at 107 mills is 143,972 and at 91 elevators and to grain dealers 165,555 or a total of 309,527 bushels. Of this amount 211,267 bushels were marketed in the southern (four tiers of counties), 61,860 in the central counties and 34,400 in the northern counties and the upper peninsula. The estimated total number of bushels of wheat marketed in the ten months August-May is 12,290,000. The amount of wheat remaining in possession of growers is estimated at 3,000,000 bushels. Sixty mills, elevators and grain dealers report no wheat marketed in May.

RYE

The condition of rye in the state, southern and central counties is 92, in the northern counties 91 and in the upper peninsula 90.

"But," he hastened to change the subject, "you're not drinking, either of you. I sincerely hope it's not so very bad."

Angle replaced her glass, barely tasted. "Do you like it, Josie?" To Josie's credit it must be admitted that she made a brave attempt to drink. But the mixture was undoubtedly flat, stale and unprofitable. She sighed, put it back on the counter and rose to the emergency.

"Mine's perfectly lovely"—with a ravishing smile—"but it's not very sweet."

"I made them dry for you—thought you'd like 'em that way," he stammered. "Perhaps you'd like 'em better if I put a collar on 'em?" The chorus negated this suggestion very promptly.

"Why don't you try a glass, Mr. Duncan?" Angle added with malice, slyly undulating Josie.

"I'm on the wagon—I mean, I don't drink at all," he said wretchedly, and was deeply grateful for the diversion afforded by the entrance of a third customer.

It was Tracey Turner, as usual swollen with important tidings, as usual propelling himself through the world at a heavy trot. It has always been a source of wonderment to me how Tracey manages to keep so stout with all the violent exercise he takes.

"Say, Angle," he twanged at sight of her, "I've been lookin' for you everywhere. Did you hear that?"

He stopped instantaneously with open mouth as he saw Duncan behind the counter, and open mouthed he remained while the young man came round and advanced toward him, with a hand smacked, accompanied by a professional bow and rubbing of hands.

"May I have the pleasure of serving you, Mr. Turner?" "Huh?" bleated Tracey, dumfounded.

"Is there anything you wish to purchase?" A violent emotion stirred in Tracey. Sounds began to emanate from his heaving chest. "N-n-no, ma'am," he breathed explosively.

Duncan bowed again, his face expressionless. "Then will you be good enough to excuse me?" He turned precisely and made his way back to the counter.

As if released from some spell of strong enchantment by the movement, Tracey swung on his heel and lunged for the door.

"What was it you wanted to ask?" "IT SERVES ME RIGHT," HE CONCLUDED, and the man. "You'll remember what I said about the choir, won't you?" He braided himself to take advantage of the opening. "I shall never forget it," he said impressively.

She gave him her hand. "Then good-by."

"Not good-by, I trust?" He retained the hand, displaying himself luxuriously.

"Oh, we'll be in again, won't we, Angle?" "Oh, yes, indeed."

"My time, Angle! What do you think? I'd almost forgotten to pay for the soda!" "The soda?" Angle called after him.

As the boy disappeared at a hard gallop his response floated back. "I forgot."

release until I speak of it, Miss Lockwood. The pleasure."

"But—I must, Mr. Duncan. How much is it?" Josie fingered the contents of her purse, expectantly, but Duncan being in the wind, he had no least notion what might be the price of soda water.

"Two for a quarter," he hazarded, with his disarming grin.

Angle choked with appreciation of this exquisite sally. "Ah! you funn—" "I'm afraid you're right," he con-

"Yes, I'm his daughter, but—" "Still, I'd rather you didn't think so."

"It's 10 cents, isn't it, Mr. Duncan?" Josie was offering him a dime. He accepted it without question.

"Thank you very much," said he. "Good afternoon, ladies."

He was aware of Angle's fluttering forebodings on the sidewalk. Josie was lingering on the doorstep in an agony of untrusting coquetry. He lowered his tone for her benefit, thereby adding new weight to his bombardment of her amateur defenses.

"Remember you promised to call again."

Her giggles tore his eardrums. "Thank you, I'm sure," she stammered and fled.

They disappeared. He wandered to the chair and threw himself limply into it. "That voice!" he said stupidly.

"That giggle! I've got to woo and win that! It serves me right," he concluded.

The most hopeless of humors assailed him, and he yielded to it with an "struggle. His attitude expressed his mood with relentless verity.

His suaveness upon his breast, eyes fairly disilling gloom, legs stretched out carelessly before him, he sat motionless, suffocating at the bottom of a gulf of discontent. His lips moved, sometimes noiselessly, again in whistles barely audible.

"Years of this! A matter of human endurance—no, superhuman! If it wasn't for the bargain, I'd chuck it all and—"

Well, the only way to forget your misery is to work, I suppose."

He pulled himself together and stood up, wondering where he had left his broom, and simultaneously stiffened with surprise, aware that he was not alone. A glance, however, established the connection between the pair door, which stood ajar, and the young woman who stood staring at him in interest stupefaction.

He was quick to see the intelligence in Betty Graham's mirthless eyes and the sweet lines of her mouth, too often slumped in sullen mold, and no less quick to recognize that she would carry herself well, with spirit and dignity, once she were relieved of household toil and moil, once given the chance to discard her shapeless, bedraggled and threadbare garments for those dainty and beautiful things for which her starved heart must be sick with longing.

"Good Lord," he thought, pitiful, "it's worse here than I dreamed. Old Graham must need a keeper, and this child has been trying to be that with nothing to keep him on."

"Who are you?" the girl demanded suddenly in a voice a little harsh and tongueless. "What are you doing here? Where's my father?"

"What, you do? You've got to be busy in a rundown place like this, with your line clothes and your airs. You didn't come here to leave the drug business. You know as well as I do you've got some other motive."

There was a truth in that to stir him. He started under his lash, he held his temper in check because he was sorry for the girl. "Perhaps you're right," he conceded. "Perhaps I have some other motive. But there's neither here nor there. I'm here, and it is my present intention to learn the drug business in your father's store."

"I don't believe you, Mr. Duncan, whatever your name is."

"I'm sorry," he said patiently. Betty's lips twitched comically. "Well, saying you do mean to work here?"

"I do."

"You're making a mistake," she snapped. "Father can't pay you nothing."

"He'll pay me all I'm worth," said Duncan meekly.

She glared at him an instant longer, then, more for lack of a sufficiently scornful retort, turned and ran back up the steps, slamming the door behind her.

CHAPTER X
AT had a busy day or two after that, trying to set things to rights in the store for the hot reception and display of the new stock. Sperry dropped him a line saying that the goods would arrive on the third day, and there was much to do to make way for them.

Between spasms of work Duncan had his hands full attending to the soda fountain. Soda water being practically the only salable thing in the store, it had to serve as an excuse for the inquisitiveness of many of his fellow citizens, to say nothing of the should put it, but especially their wives and daughters. The consumption of vanilla soda in those two days broke all known Radville records and stands a singular tribute to the Spar-tan fortitude of Radville womanhood, particularly the young stratum thereof.

From my window in the Citizen office I was able to keep tolerably close account of events and obtain a consensus of public opinion. So far as the latter bore upon Duncan, it was divided into two rather distinct parties, one, of course, favoring him, and this was feminine almost exclusively. Tracey Turner, to be sure, confessed with in my hearing to predilection for the New York crowd, but was inclined to hedge and elude the fence when assailed by Roland's strictures. Roland, I suspect, was a wee mite jealous. He had been paying attention to—mean, going with—Josie Lockwood for several months. Instinctively he must have divined his danger, and it's not his reason to exact admiration of the usurper from the usurped even when the act of usurpation has not yet been fully consummated. Roland went to the length of labeling Duncan "sissy" and professed to believe that Hiram Nutt was justified in calling him a "spineless character." Roland hinted darkly that Duncan knew New York no better than Will Rigelow.

"And if he did come from there," he asserted, "I bet he didn't leave for no good purpose."

His temper inspired me with the subtle reflection that it's a terrible thing to be in love even if only with an old man's millions.

"There's got to be a real New Yorker here before long," Roland boasted. "He's bound to see me on some special private business of ours."

"Huh," commented Tracey, the skeptic, "what kind of a New Yorker'd come all the way here to see you?"

"That's all right. You'll see when he gets here. He's a promoter."

"A what?"

"A promoter, a banker," Roland pronounced it "human secret," thus betraying symptoms of culture and bewildering Tracey beyond expression.

"What's that?" he demanded aggressively.

"That's a fellow I can take nothing at all and incorporate it and make money out of it," Roland defined with some hesitancy.

JOY TO THE BANKER'S HEART

The dependable man is the one that brings joy to the bankers heart. He is the kind that the bank likes to do business with. Whatever the size of the obligation, be it $5 or $5,000, if a man cannot meet it when due, he should be at the bank "on the dot" and explain why. The bank is always ready and willing to explain anything in connection with its own business and expects its customers to do the same. No man should have anything in his business which he cannot lay bare before his banker. The joy of the banker's heart is the man who may be absolutely depended upon first, last, and all the time. If any young man starting in business has an idea that character is not a business asset of the highest order, let him talk to some banker about it and he will have cause to change his mind. We solicit the business of dependable men.

W. C. T. U. DEPARTMENT

Conducted by the local W. C. T. U.

Fully two hundred delegates and visitors were in attendance at the W. C. T. U. state convention held at Petoskey last week, and a more enthusiastic and energetic lot of reformers and moral educators never have been in one body. The ladies and their gentlemen abettors are intensely in earnest, and there is a system and a vim in their work which carries conviction in spite of any preconceived notions one might have.

The program on Tuesday was carried out practically in its entirety, and that means there was a feast of good things for the crowded house. The afternoon meeting was a business session for the most part, and was largely given out to routine work and reports.

The night session, after music, was followed by an enthusiastic devotional exercises led by Rev. Louis Grosvenor, then more music of a good quality under the efficient management of Mrs. Langworthy.

Mayor W. L. McMinn extended a most cordial and gracious greeting and a welcome to the convention.

Rev. C. Louis Berry responded for the churches of the city in a happy vein, and was well received; Prof. Hartwell spoke for the city schools in a way that won the hearts of all the delegates, and home people, and caused a thrill of pride among our folks; the little talk of Mrs. Chichester, welcoming the ladies in behalf of the federation of women's clubs, was well worthy of mention, and it represented much of the very best element of the entire community; Mrs. W. L. Curtis responded in the name of missions and right earnestly did she represent her cause, and she made many friends thereby; Mrs. Emma Lamb Barnes addressed the convention in the name of the local W. C. T. U., and with a heart full of her subject and for a common brotherhood, the lady warmed up to her subject to a high degree of eloquence.

There was more good music, then a response by Mrs. Lenora H. Halcomb, State Loyal Temperance Legion secretary.

Thursday morning President Collins was presented with a handsome spoon by Miss Fannie Walz from her own Finland, one of the kind in general use in that far-away land, which is in such constant use that it is suspended from the neck. Not, however, the kind of "spoons" that "hang around the neck" in America, and which these good women deprecate.

In the afternoon several of the district vice-presidents were given time to report their districts, and many encouraging estimates were presented which brought cheer to the assemblage. Department superintendents also made their reports which show a good advance all along the line, and at this time a greeting from the Grand Rapids newshy was received.

Representative Straight complimented the ladies of the W. C. T. U. who were at Lansing last winter in the interest of some reform bill.

Rev. Hauer, secretary of the anti-salutation league for northern Michigan then had a few words, and thought it foolishness to talk of women lowering themselves to the level of men, which was evidenced that men were lowered and debased. He deprecated the double standard in all lines.

Friday morning was given to general topics of the published program and great enthusiasm was aroused on the subject of an executive probing of the conditions at the Marquette prison; the delegates being firmly impressed that cruelties practiced there should be stopped, and one lady thought it bad that the governor should continue a man as warden because he was a personal friend, regardless of his humanity and eminent fitness, and the following resolution was passed:

"That the general officers of the Michigan Woman's Christian Temperance Union petition the governor to cause a thorough investigation to be made of the conditions existing in Marquette prison and to do all in his power to correct the abuses, said to exist there."

Mrs. C. H. Moore in her address Friday morning made special reference to the beautiful decorations and also of the open city, and declared that perhaps never before had the convention been so well honored in all respects.

Nearly every business house in the city was decorated in honor of the convention and a large welcome banner was stretched across the street.

Representative Straight gave a very interesting address about the legislative work last winter and the conditions at Marquette prison.

Those in attendance from this city were Mrs. Putnam, Wilkinson, Burns, Alcox and Burdick.

All kinds of repairs for spray pumps, such as nozzles, shut-off nozzles and bamboo rod, hose connections, etc., Sam Beaman. 23f

Literary Notes

The Cow's Birthday More Important Than the Girl's.

Robert W. Brumre makes a strong plea for the prevention of infant mortality. He says that 275,000 babies die each year in this country and that half of them parish unnecessarily. Mr. Brumre is director of the American Association for the Study and Prevention of Infant Mortality, and he reports many wonderful facts and suggestions in the June Woman's Home Companion. On the cheapness of human life in general he tells the following:

"Dr. Cressy L. Wilbur, chief statistician of the Bureau of the Census in Washington, tells a story taken from court records, which fairly typifies our national attitude toward vital statistics. 'Farmer Hadley,' he said, 'of Indiana, on dying, left his valuable farm in trust to his only son, to become the property of his granddaughter on her twenty-first birthday. The girl had been told the date of her birth, and when her twenty-first anniversary, as she supposed, came around, she claimed her inheritance. But her father refused to surrender the farm, asserting that she was only nineteen. The dispute was taken into court. The family Bible was appealed to, but the page for births and deaths were blank. The father had rendered no report to the town authorities; the family doctor was dead. Finally a neighbor remembered that a certain cow, much prized by the grandfather, had given birth to a calf the very day when the girl was born, and 'he could swear to it.' Perhaps, the court opined, the grandfather had recorded the birth of the calf? The old farm book, carefully preserved in the family strong box, sustained the judge's theory; all the circumstances of the calf's birth were fully recorded. And thus the birthday of the human being was at length established."

"Talk about the registration of births in the United States," exclaimed Dr. Wilbur; "why, for not much more than one-half the total population there is a fairly accurate registration of deaths, to say nothing of births of which we have nowhere in the country reliable or complete information, and many of the states are so little concerned about human life that they make no more account of the deaths of their citizens than of the trees they burn to make clearings."

DIRECTIONS FOR SPRAYING.

Suggestions For Getting Best Results Offered by Wisconsin Authority.

To spray home orchards and get the best results the following suggestions are offered by the horticultural department of the agricultural experiment station of the University of Wisconsin:

Fungous diseases and insects usually work upon trees at the same time; therefore use a spray of bordeaux mixture to which some arsenical poison has been added. Ten ounces of Paris green or three pounds of arsenate of lead added to fifty gallons of bordeaux mixture will control the codling moth or apple worm and apple scab.

Most fruit growers will find it more advisable to purchase arsenicals in the prepared form than to mix them at home, which involves much labor and care. Bordeaux mixture, which is used for spraying to prevent fungous diseases, should be prepared at home. To get the best results a strong pressure pump with good nozzles that will throw a fine mist spray should be used.

Growers should watch the development of the trees closely at blossoming time and make a thorough application before the calyx of the apple closes. The leaves and stems of branches not fruiting should be covered with spray up to the top of the tree. The spray should be thrown from many directions so as to cover both sides of the leaves thoroughly.

As a general rule the first spraying should be made just before the buds open, with 250 gallons of bordeaux mixture, including poison for each 200 trees. The second application should be made just after the blossoms fall, with 250 gallons; the third application ten days later, the fourth two weeks after the third, and the fifth three weeks after the fourth. The last three sprayings should be made with 400 gallons of bordeaux mixture and poison.

MADE FROM SCRAP IRON.

How Some Old Material May Be Turned Into a Useful Tool.

On every farm there is sure to accumulate in time a considerable amount of old iron. This is always saved with the idea that some of it can be utilized for various purposes, and with the knowledge that the remainder can be sold as old iron. It is good economy to save this material, and it is a good plan to sort it more or less closely so that similar articles may be together. Use for something from this scrap pile may be found almost daily. For instance, an old wagon tire may be cut, straightened out and used as the connecting rod on a wagon brake.

In the cut shown herewith there is indicated a way in which a very useful tool may be made from the half of an old strap hinge. This homemade tool is for use in making wire joints or couplings, and the picture shows pretty well how it is used. As the loop on the ordinary hinge is generally too small to accommodate a two or three strand wire, the picture is drawn to show this loop cut off and the end of the hinge bent over to form a new one. Before this new loop is made a section of the hinge should be filed away, as shown, so as to give a grip on the end of the wire. A nice, smooth wire coupling or splice not only adds much to its appearance, but increases its life as well. A good joint does not

DOG CHASING A DEER

Passenger on Minnie S. Saw a Strange Sight Wednesday

When the Minnie S. was going to Boyne City on her last trip from Charlevoix Wednesday afternoon the passengers were treated to a strange sight and one that will be remembered for a long time as it was so out of the ordinary. When opposite Chula Vista some one happened to look landward discovered a deer breaking from the woods and running down to the Karlestein dock. It was closely followed by a dog who seemed bent upon overtaking the fleet footed denizen of the forest and the frightened deer instead of taking to the water, rushed back into the woods and disappeared, closely followed by his notting enemy, the dog. It is not know whether the deer escaped or not but in all probability the poor animal was run down and killed.

So far as we have been able to learn, this is the first wild deer seen anywhere about this section for years.

Charlevoix the Beautiful.

Charlevoix the Beautiful,
You have a pretty name,
And though you're not big and busy,
We love you just the same.
We love your silent waters
That flow in the darkest night
We love the change of season
That covers the ground with its white.
We love nature's surroundings
Which adds to the beauty of home
Charlevoix would still be beautiful
The "twere left in the world alone.
High on the water tower
I've scanned your boundary,
I've gazed from here to horizon
To see where the beauty lay.
I found, it covered the landscape
As far as the eye could see,
I raised my voice to shouting
Charlevoix's the place for me.
I've pictured the sun going down,
Shedding its last sunny rays;
I've pictured our beautiful town,
When it seemed in its happiest days.
There's no other little city
And no other city grand,
Can take me to its pleasures
While Charlevoix's on hand.

The above tribute to our beautiful city was written by one of our enthusiastic summer visitors, and not only voices the sentiments of our residents, but those who make Charlevoix their summer home. —Ed.

Nursing as a Career.

It is said that nursing is one of the most inviting fields of human service and that its financial return surpasses any other occupation open to young women. It develops all the native graces of womanhood and leads the way to positions of trust and influence. The demand for more nurses is a world-wide call.

The Philadelphia School for Nurses, located at Philadelphia, Pa., has undertaken to meet this demand by offering free scholarships to young women in all parts of the country. Room, board, laundering, incidental expenses, special financial assistance and railroad fare home on completion of the course, are provided. Length of course, two years. Also a special short course and a home study course for those who must quickly prepare for self-support.

The Philadelphia School for Nurses is a benevolent institution conducted without hope of gain or profit in the interest of ambitious young women. Readers of this paper can get full information by writing the school at once.

The "Discourses of Epictetus" were written out by the philosopher himself, but by his faithful pupil Arrian, afterward the historian of Alexander the Great. Arrian tells us that he took down the sayings of his master at the time they were delivered, and thus we may rely upon the substantial correctness of the discourses. Epictetus wrote nothing, and but for the thoughtfulness of his affectionate disciple we would have known nothing of his wonderful teachings—teachings which have inspired many of the greatest men who have lived during the past 2,000 years.

"And that's why he's coming down here to take a look at you?" inquired Tracey, skipping lightly round the corner.

Curiously enough in my understanding (for I own to no great faith in Roland's statements, taking them by and large) his friend from New York put in an unobtrusive appearance in the hotel that same night on the evening train. The Bigelow House received him to its hospitable bosom under the name of W. H. Burnham. He sent for Roland promptly and treated him to a dinner at the hotel, something which I have always regarded as a punishment several sizes too large for the crime. Later, having displayed him on the streets to witness to his good faith, Roland spent the evening with Mr. Burnham, mysteriously consulting behind closed doors in the hotel.

Duncan was at the station a few days later superintending the transportation of the new stock, which had come by the early local. Betty was busy with her household work upstairs, and only old Sam kept the shop.

Sam wasn't in the best of spirits. His evergreen optimism seldom withered, but in spite of all that had already been accomplished in behalf of the store, in spite of the roster aspect of its declining fortunes and his confidence in and affection for Duncan, Sam was worried. He had been over to the bank once even at that early hour, but Blinky Lockwood had driven out of town to see about foreclosing one of his numerous mortgages in the neighborhood, and his note, which fell due at the bank that day, was still a weight upon Sam's mind.

Roland and Burnham found him wandering nervously round the store, alternately taking his hat down from the peg, as if minded to make a second

"I don't remember hearing anything about the matter until you call it a burner, eh, from Mr. Burnham?"

"I guess Roland forgot," Sam allowed. "He's so busy courtin' our pretty girls, Mr. Burnham."

"Yes, that was it," Roland put in hastily, seeing his chance to mend matters. "I did intend to write you about it, Mr. Burnham, but I kind of slipped my mind. We're had a lot of important business over to the bank recently."

"By the way, Roland, did you just come from the bank? Is Mr. Lockwood back yet?"

"No, I got off this morning. I don't think he is, Sam. Did you want to see him?"

"Well, yes," Sam admitted. "I guess you know about that, Roland."

"Mean business, sometimes, asking favors of these bankers, eh, Mr. Burnham?" Burnham remarked.

Graham smiled deviously. "Yes, it is unpleasant," he admitted confidentially. "You see, there's a note of mine come due today, and I'm not able to take care of it or pay the interest just now. But I guess I'll be all right. Mr. Lockwood's kind, very kind."

"I'm afraid you're a little too sure, Sam," Roland contributed tactfully. "When there's money due Lockwood he wants it, and most times he gets it or its equivalent."

"But," Burnham changed the subject adroitly, "what was this—burner, did you say—that Mr. Burnham got to tell me about?"

"Oh, just one of my inventions, sir. I've spent most of my life at it, sir, but somehow nothing has ever turned out well—not so far, I mean. But I mean to hit it yet."

"That's the way to talk," Burnham cried heartily. "Never give up, I say! But tell me about some of these inventions, won't you?"

"Well," Sam knitted his fingers and pursed his lips reflectively. "I patented a new type thrashing machine once, but I couldn't get anything to take hold of it. You see, I haven't any money, Mr. Burnham."

"WHAT WAS THIS—BURNER?"

"How would you like to talk it over with me some time? I'm interested in such things—as a sort of side issue."

"Will you?" Sam's eagerness was not to be disguised.

"Be glad to. Tell me, how did you get your power?"

"From gas, sir, though coal will do most as well. You see, I've got this burner patented that makes gas from crude oil—no waste, no odor nor trouble and little expense. It'd be cheaper than coal, I thought; that's why I invented it. I could get steam up mighty quick with that gas arrangement. I use it for lighting here in the store now."

"Do you, indeed?" Burnham's tone indicated falling interest, but such diplomacy was lost on Sam.

"If you've got time I could show you. It's right over here."

A glance at his watch accompanied Burnham's consent to spare a few minutes. "There's a telegram I must send presently," he said. "But I'd like to see this burner. If it won't take long."

"No, not long, just a minute or two," Sam was already dragging the affair out from under the window box. "You see—"

He went on to expound its virtues with all the fond enthusiasm of a father showing off his firstborn and wound up with a demonstration of the illuminating appliance. I'm afraid, though, he got little encouragement from Mr. Burnham. He considered the machine with a dispassionate air, its true, and admitted its practical advantages, but wasn't at all disposed to take a rosy view of its future.

"Yes," he grunted when Sam put a match to the jet, "that's certainly a very good light."

"All right, ain't it?" chimed Roland, enthusiastic.

"Oh, it may amount to something. It's hard to tell. Of course you know, sir," he continued, addressing Graham directly, "you've got competition to overcome."

Sam's old fingers trembled to his chin. "No-o," he said, "I didn't know that. I've got the patent."

"Of course that's something. But the Consolidated Petroleum crowd has another machine, slightly different, which does the same work and, I should say, does it better."

"Is—that so?" quavered Sam.

"My patent—"

"Now, see here, Mr. Graham," Burnham argued, "we're practical men both of us."

"No, I shouldn't say that about myself," Sam interjected. "Now, you, sir, I can see you're a man who understands such things. But I—"

"Nevertheless you must know that a patent isn't everything. You said a moment ago a man had to have money to make anything out of his inventions."

"Did I?" Sam interjected, surprised. "Certainly you did. And dead right you are—A patent's all very well, but supposing you're up against a powerful competitor like the Consolidated Petroleum company. They've got a patent too. Granted, it may be an infringement of yours, even. What can you do against them?"

"Why, if it's an infringement—"

"Sure, of course. But do you suppose they're going to lie down just because an unknown and penniless inventor sues them? Bless you, no! They'll fight to the last ditch. They'll engage the best legal talent in the country. You'll have to carry the case to the supreme court of the United States if you want a winning decision. And that's going to cost you thousands—hundreds of thousands—a million!"

"Never mind. A thousand's enough," said Sam gently. "I see what you mean, sir. It's just another case where I've got no chance."

"Oh, I wouldn't put it as strong as that."

"But I have no money."

"Still, you never can tell. I'll think it over if you get time."

"Why, that's kind of you, sir; very kind."

It was at this point that Roland rose to the occasion like the noble ass he is. Roland never could see more than an inch beyond the end of his nose.

"Say, Mr. Burnham," he floundered, "don't you think you could help Sam to—"

"I think," said Mr. Burnham, with additional business of looking at his watch, "I'd like to send that wire I spoke of."

Wilson Grange No. 719.

Wilson Grange met in regular session Saturday, June 10, 1911, with an attendance of thirty members and three visitors.

The meeting was called to order by worthy Master Geo. Japays and during the business session a few bills were presented. Different members talked about the erection of the new kitchen and dining hall and the master appointed Edward S. Brintnall, Albert Todd and Jasper Warden to oversee the building of it. Then the lightning rod agent showed samples and gave prices of lightning rods. After this Mrs. Myrtle Roberts and Mrs. Jacob Roberts were initiated in the 1st and 2nd degrees, by the degree team.

Then the master called for the lecturer's program which consisted of songs, readings and recitations. Lora Warden was elected organist to fill vacancy left by Miss Grace Hamilton. Grange was dismissed to meet again in two weeks.

MUCH FOOD FORFUTURE THOUGHT

other end of the factory it was a tiny wire through, flexible as silk, forty-five inches long, that would reach from New York to San Francisco and on to Sitka, Alaska. Fifty dollars worth of steel wrought into wire gauge had taken on a value of $5000.

"Another illustration from the same source; Fifty years ago a contractor came to David Maydole, a young blacksmith in Norwich, N. Y., and ordered six hammers, the best that he could make, hammers whose heads would not fly off the handle. 'But,' said the blacksmith, 'perhaps you do not want to pay for as good a hammer as I can make. A perfect hammer means three new changes that have never been put on any hammer. It means that the head must be very hard in temper to drive the nail, that the claws must be very tough to pull out the nail representing a different temper for steel. Then it means that the central part of the hammer must have steel that is flexible and soft, extending out along the handle which means a third kind of temper.' But the contractor answered, 'You make me a perfect hammer and we will not quarrel about the price.' The hammers were faithfully made and became their own advertising agents. The fame of David Maydole's hammer went abroad. One day a Scotchman came to Norwich and visited the factory, but when told that the best hammer in the world was manufactured there, he scoffed, and insisted that the best hammers were made in Great Britain. He therefore sent to a friend in Glasgow to procure the best hammer possible in England and send to him, to meet the wager he had made. When the hour came for testing the merits of the two hammers, and the package was opened, this hammer, which had journeyed all the way from England to Norwich, was found to bear the name of David Maydole, and had first journeyed all the way from America to England to meet the needs of a workman who wanted the best hammer in the world."

"But in calling attention to material success I would not have you feel that the great emphasis is there. Your great achievements are not to be material, but spiritual. The real success in life is in the building of a great character, and you can do that splendidly, and your great satisfactions are not in wealth or fame, but in living true to those great ideals which belong in the Divine pattern and which shall endure when all earthly glory has passed away. Build that which will make your life eternal. A distinguished author relates the story of one who in an hour of moral weakness concluded to run away from every known duty and to turn away from all honor. He took the carriage for the station resolute in his evil purpose. Just as he stepped from the carriage, his father, long since dead, stood before him in the station door, and raising his hand seemed to call: 'My son, my son, go back, go back.' Immediately the son obeyed, and an hour later was found at his usual duties, determined to live true to the high ideals of his sainted father. We all have our theory of what it was that made the stoic and lasting impression upon that young man's mind in the hour of his moral peril and saved him at the great crisis of his life, but we are sure that the father still lived in the memory of his son, and the years of loyalty to high ideals made his life permanent, through the onward march had decayed. The moral victory in the life of the son was worth vastly more than all the sacrifice the father had ever made to keep his life for the highest things."

My young friends, struggle for the things that are worth while, the things that are to abide. Make your lives a permanent part of forces for righteousness in the world, and when life's sun sinks beneath the western horizon for you, you will still live, and your life, linked with God will share in the divine work and victory."

MAY BE BROUGHT BACK

Fannie C. Hart Sold Under the Hammer of the Auctioneer

Many of our sailors and marine men will be interested in the following article, taken from the Detroit Journal:

"Somewhat checkered has been the career of the little passenger and package freight steamer Fannie C. Hart. After plying for a number of years between Green Bay ports, the boat was sold to a Florida firm and left last fall for Miami, Florida. The vessel passed down by Detroit late last September and owing to repairs at Buffalo and delays along the Atlantic coast did not reach her destination until nearly Christmas. The Hart ran along the Florida coast from Miami to Jacksonville.

"To satisfy libels which piled up against the steamer the Hart was sold under the hammer of the auctioneer last week. Her purchaser was L. C. Geer. It is possible that Mr. Geer will decide to bring the little vessel back to the lakes and if so she will soon start again on the long passage up the Atlantic coast and down the St. Lawrence river to the lakes.

"The Hart was owned by the Green Bay Transportation Co. Her sister ship Eugene Hart, is still in commission on the Green Bay route."

Farm and GardenFIGHT THE WILD CARROT.

This Weed is a Great Spreader, but Not Very Hard to Eradicate.

The wild carrot, familiarly known as "bird's nest" or "Queen Anne's lace," is found on wild land and along the roads in the eastern half of the United States and Canada. It came here from England. It produces a dwarf stalk from one to three feet high and has tall, slender, hollow stems and a finely cut leaf. The flowers are white, and the clusters with the stems resemble an umbrella. It has a very strong, suffocating odor when in bloom, and this with its nectar attracts scores of insects. It blooms from June to September. The large number of insects which visit it make it a pest almost sure, which partly accounts for the readiness with which it spreads says Parry and Elbridge.

It is a perennial, and the first season it produces rather a low vegetative growth. The second season it sends up long flower stems. The seeds are very numerous, and if the flower stems are cut down before seed has been formed new stems will come up.

This weed is a demon to spread, but not very hard to eradicate. Good cut ivation will keep it out of cropped fields, especially where there is a rotation including one or more cultivated crops. In permanent pastures, along roads and in other places not cultivated it should be cut down with the scythe. This must be done repeatedly to keep the new flower stems that spring up from carrying their seeds to maturity, but persistent cutting will kill the weed out, generally in two years. If the weeds are not too numerous they can be killed off individually once and for all by cutting the root underground with a spud, sharp spade or other handy implement.

Recent tests have indicated that the wild carrot is vulnerable to several weed killing sprays. One solution that is recommended is sodium arsenite, one pound to twenty-six gallons of water, sprayed on when the plants are dry.

When we have repaired the buildings where our live stock is kept through the winter would it not be well to visit the "school-house on the hill" and look over the buildings where the children spend the winter days?

Tobacco Stems For Fertilizer.

Tobacco stems are sometimes sold as a fertilizer. If comparatively dry they contain something over 2 per cent of nitrogen, a trace of phosphoric acid and 5 or 6 per cent of potash. They usually rot around $14 a ton and are well worth the money.—American Agriculturist.

Advice to Corn Growers.

Unless there is an experienced and successful corn breeder in the vicinity who makes a specialty of growing first class seed corn every farmer had better make his own selection from his own field or from the best fields of neighboring farms.

Try Peppers For Profit.

Peppers may be easily grown in all parts of the country, and market prices are generally quite good. Farmers consume them in large quantities, and Americans, re using them more extensively than a few years ago.

Pruning Notes.

Currents and gooseberries may be pruned as soon as the leaves fall, or the work may be left until early spring. Cut back one-third of last year's growth and thin out surplus, diseased or unthrifty shoots.

There are thousands of dollars lost every year by sowing poor seeds. Do not expect a good crop when poor seeds are sown. Seeons, good cultivation and proper fertilization will not compensate for seed from inferior plants.

CHARLEVOIX'S POSTAL SAVINGS BANK

Information Regarding the System of Interest to Our Readers

CHILD OVER 10 YEARS IS ELIGIBLE

Deposits Will Draw Two Per Cent Interest

Banking Operations to Commence July 1 Under Charge of Money Order Clerk Miss McHugh

As Charlevoix is soon to have a postal saving bank, some information regarding the system will be interesting.

In the first place an account can be started with 10 cents and any child over 10 years of age is eligible. No fee is charged for opening an account and deposits will draw two per cent and are guaranteed by the government.

The money order department takes charge of the postal savings business. This being the case Miss Anna McHugh, assistant postmaster, will likely be the person to have charge of this new branch of service. The hours will probably be the same as that of the money order hours.

When you approach the window, hold out your time and say: "Give me a postal savings card." This card is worth a tenth of a dollar, and as you accumulate other dimes you buy postal savings stamps, at 10 cents each, and stick them on the card until there are nine. When your account runs to one or more dollars you can take your savings card to the bank designated by the government for their purpose and get a certificate of deposit by filling out an application blank. You will get a deposit book such as you would if you went to a savings bank.

The full faith of the United States is pledged to the payment of deposits made in any postal savings depository, together with the accrued interest.

WHO MAY DEPOSIT

Accounts may be opened by any person who is a patron of the office and ten years of age or over in his or her own name and by a married woman in her own name free from any interference or control by her husband.

Accounts must be opened in person or by a duly authorized representative. After an account has been opened subsequent deposits may be made by mail.

Accounts cannot be opened by two persons jointly, nor by any corporation, association, society, firm or co-partnership. Nor can an account be opened by one person in trust for or on behalf of another.

The service is free and no charge or fee is collected or required in opening an account. Absolute privacy is maintained concerning the account, no person connected with the postal service or postoffice department being permitted to disclose the name of a depositor or to give any information concerning the account.

HOW TO OPEN AN ACCOUNT

When a person wishes to open an account he must furnish the necessary information to the postmaster in an application to be signed by him. In signing by mark a disinterested person must witness the mark.

Deposits are evidenced by postal savings certificates issued in fixed denominations of $1, $2, $5, $10, $20, $50 and $100, each bearing the name of the depositor, the number of his account, the date of issue, the name of the office and the date on which interest begins. The postmaster retains a duplicate of this certificate which the depositor signs.

No account can be opened for less than one dollar and fractions of a dollar are not received. Smaller deposits than one dollar are made by the means of a postal savings card, and stamps as described below.

No person is allowed to deposit more than $100 in any calendar month, nor to have a greater deposit than $500 at any one time, exclusive of interest.

The savings certificates are not transferable nor negotiable and will be paid only to the person to whom issued.

On opening an account the depositor or is supplied with an envelope in which to keep his certificates. This envelope contains printed information for his guidance. The depositor is also provided with a blank ledger record on which to keep an account of his deposits and withdrawals.

In case of the loss of a certificate the depositor should notify the postmaster and a new certificate will be issued on complying with the necessary requirements. The postmaster cannot receive savings certificates for safe keeping.

POSTAL SAVINGS CARDS AND STAMPS

Amounts less than one dollar may be saved for deposit by the purchase of 10 cent postal savings cards and adhesive 10 cent postal savings stamps. Each postal savings card contains blank spaces to which savings stamps can be affixed from time to time as purchased and a postal savings card with nine 10 cent postal savings stamps affixed will be accepted as a deposit of $1 either in opening an account or adding to an existing account.

Savings cards and stamps will be redeemed only by the issue of savings certificates and are not valid for postage.

Interest is paid annually on all deposits at the rate of two per cent per annum. No interest will be paid on money which remains for a fraction of a year only. Deposits commence to draw interest on the first day of the month next following that in which deposited.

Interest accrues on a savings certificate as long as it remains outstanding and unpaid without limitation as to time. Compound interest is not allowed but a depositor may draw accrued interest and deposit anew, and the same will bear interest at the regular rate.

A depositor may withdraw the whole or any part of his deposit at any time by surrendering his certificate properly indorsed.

Provision is made in the postal savings act for the opening of accounts by those who cannot appear personally because of infirmity or other sufficient reason. The same is true in the withdrawal of deposit by such persons.

In case of the death of a depositor the amount standing to his credit will be paid to the executor or administrator of his estate upon compliance with the necessary requirements. In case administration of the estate is not desired by the relatives, the postmaster may if it is deemed proper, be authorized to pay the amount of the deposit, on application in proper form, to the person entitled to receive it.

A depositor may be permitted to exchange the whole or any part of his deposits in sums of $20, $50, $80, $90 or $100 or multiples of $100 up to and including $500 for U. S. registered or coupon bonds bearing interest at the rate of two and one-half per cent per annum, payable semi-annually. Such change may be made under date of January 1st or July 1st on application made 15 days prior to such dates.

Savings deposits converted into bonds are not counted as a part of the maximum amount of $500 allowed to one depositor and there is no limit to the amount of available postal savings bonds which may be acquired by a depositor. Such bonds will not be issued or sold to others than depositors.

Postal savings bonds are exempt from taxes or duties of the United States, as well as from taxation in any form by state or municipal authority.

The above contains practically all there is to the working of the postal savings system. Further information may be obtained by application to any depository office or by inquiry directed to the postmaster general.

Leaflets containing information for depositors printed in several foreign languages will soon be available at the post office for those not fully able to understand the English language.

BASS SEASON OPENS

Season Opened Friday, May the Seventh

The black bass season opened on Friday and the fishermen of this region should post themselves thoroughly upon the fish laws in order to avoid any complications with the game warden who will have a watchful eye on the waters of this part of the state for the purpose of protecting the fish from the vandals who seem determined to exterminate this valuable species of gamey fish.

MUST GIVE NOTICE BEFORE JUNE 26

Change in High School Law Requires Written Notice to School Board

MUST HOLD EIGHTH GRADE DIPLOMA

Notice Must be Made to Boards Before Above Date

Statement of Superintendent of Public Instruction Concerning Same—Law Mandatory

Attention of parents and guardians is called to the fact that under the new act, those who have children that have completed the eighth grade and wish to attend high school in another district, must file a written notice to the school board on or before Monday, June 26.

The law provides first that all districts that do not maintain high schools must pay the tuition to one of the three nearest high schools of children who have completed the studies of the eighth grades. A high school is defined as a graded school maintaining twelve grades with at least two teachers devoting their entire teaching time to the ninth, tenth, eleventh and twelfth grades.

A primary district is not compelled to pay the tuition of any pupil unless such pupil is the holder of a county eighth grade diploma or has passed at least the eighth grade in a graded school or had his tuition paid last under the provisions of this law.

Written notice to the board on or before the fourth Monday of June is an essential part of the transaction. This notice may be signed by a parent, person in parental relation or legal guardian of the children making application for tuition. Any child who is a resident of the district on the fourth Monday of June and possesses the other necessary qualifications is entitled to have his tuition paid. When a child is a resident of the district at the time of making application, the tuition must be paid for the entire year by that district whether the family moves from that district or not. If a child moves during the year and wishes to change high schools there is no reason why he should not be allowed to do so.

The school board is required to levy a tax up to $20 or the tuition may be paid from surplus primary money, if the district has such. The people at the annual meeting may appropriate a sum larger than $20 if necessary, but the board cannot pay a larger sum on its own motion.

The board may vote to pay transportation of pupils and levy a tax therefor if it sees fit to do so.

The tuition is paid in amounts and in a manner to be designated by the receiving district, that is to say, it is the province of the board in any school district to determine the terms and manner of admission of non-resident pupils. We recommend, however, that it be paid at the end of each semester.

The tuition is to be paid by one district treasurer and in no case should money be paid to pupils or guardians.

It is the board that levies the tax for tuition and not the people.

This law is designed to take care of pupils who live in districts maintaining 10-grade schools, also of pupils who live in districts maintaining 11-grade schools. A school board in a primary district may pay tuition to a 10-grade school having one teacher devoting his entire time to the ninth and tenth grades until the 10 grades are finished. Then the district must pay the child's tuition for the two other grades to a 12-grade school. A district maintaining a 10-grade school, after the 10 grades are finished must pay the tuition of children having completed such work to a 12-grade school.

In making application, one of the three nearest schools is designated and a 10-grade school may be included as one of the three, if so desired.

Under the law as it now reads, neither the school board nor the teacher in a primary district has anything to say about whether a child has completed the eight grades or not. The law specifies that he must hold an eighth grade diploma or have completed eight grades of work in a graded school district.

The law is mandatory and school boards have no discretion as to the payment of tuition.

SUPERNAW-BOW

Prominent Young Atwood Farmer Marries Elk Rapids Lady

On June 12, St. Louis church at Atwood was beautifully decorated with cut flowers and potted plants for the wedding of Miss Florence Bow, eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward F. Bow of Elk Rapids, to Mr. Supernaw, only son of Mr. and Mrs. Calvin Supernaw of Atwood. Rev. Innocent Schlueter of Harbor Springs officiated.

The bride was charmingly gowned in white silk, with a white hat, and carried only her white prayer book. The gown worn by the matron of honor, Mrs. Hoffman was of white French lawn and beautiful lace. Mr. Hoffman assisted the groom.

After the ceremony the wedding breakfast was served to the bridal party and their friends and relatives at the home of the groom's parents. It is with the parents of the groom at Atwood that the young people will reside. Mr. Supernaw being one of Bank township's most prosperous young farmers.

The bride's array of presents, consisting chiefly of fine linens, silver and china, was unusually beautiful and abundant. Her gift from the groom's father was a substantial check.

WAS BURIED ALIVE

Workman on Sewer Job Caught by Timbers in Cave-in

Was Foreman and Interpreter for Gang of Polish Workmen

A bad cave-in occurred on the sewer at the tip of the hill on North Bridge street, Monday forenoon about 11 o'clock, causing the death of Frank Farlan of Cleveland, O., foreman and interpreter of the gang of Polish workmen who are working on the sewer.

At this point the depth of the sewer is about 13 feet and is curbed up on each side with heavy plank and held by jack screws. Thomas Taylor and a helper were placing tile into position and upon reaching the point where the accident occurred, noticed that the curbing was loose and the banks had started to cave. They immediately started to get out of the sewer and were on their way out when met by Farlan, whom they informed of the condition of the curbing. Farlan stated he was sure there was no immediate danger, and went into the sewer to the place where Taylor had told him was unsafe. He started to tighten the jack screws holding a part of the curbing when it gave away. From the position of the body when taken out, it showed that the jack screw he was working upon had dropped, letting one of the cross supports fall across his back while another fell across his legs, pinning him to the bottom of sewer. He was covered with dirt and gravel to the depth of three feet.

Those who saw the accident state that death was instantaneous, the weight of the plank and gravel crushing out his life. It was nearly three hours before the body was recovered, the condition of the sewer banks making the work extremely hazardous.

The body was taken to See's undertaking rooms, where it was prepared for burial.

No blame can be attached to Contractor Caldwell nor to the city, as Farlan had been warned by Taylor and his helper and knew the unsafe condition of the sewer banks when he entered it.

ORCHARD DEMONSTRATIONS

Development Bureau Opens Up the Week at Beaver Island

Balance of the Week Demonstration Will be Given Throughout County

John I. Gibson, C. E. Smith and D. S. Payton, of the Western Michigan Development opened up the week of orchard demonstrations to be given in this county, at Beaver Island, Monday. The demonstration was held at the farm of Dan T. Gallagher and was an unqualified success, there being over a hundred people present from all parts of the island. C. E. Smith gave a practical demonstration of spraying and pruning and much information was gleaned from his work.

In the evening Secretary Gibson gave a lecture at the town hall and illustrated his points by stereopticon views. The hall was packed to the doors, there being 200 people present. A vote of thanks was extended Mr. Gibson and the bureau by those present for the effort they had put forth and the success it had resulted in.

Today a demonstration is being given at the farm of Arthur Wood in Hayes township followed by the usual evening lecture.

Thursday the bureau representatives will be at the farm of William Withers of Marion, followed by a lecture at the grange hall in the evening. From there they will visit other points in the county as announced in the program published last week.

NEW ELECTRIC SIGN

Manager Loskot of the Charlevoix Theater Builds One

During the past weeks Manager Loskot of the Charlevoix theater has been busily engaged in the manufacture of an electric sign which he placed in the front of the theater last Friday afternoon. The electric sign is 10 feet 5 inches long 3 feet wide and 10 inches deep, and is composed of 270 lights, which form the words, "Charlevoix Theater" visible from both sides. Three hundred and eighty-five feet of wire was used to connect up the letters in the sign.

The result of Mr. Loskot's labor and artistic design will be before the public Saturday evening when the sign, for the first time, will set forth its increasing rays of light across Bridge street and announce that there is some live place in motion pictures in the city.

BANQUET POSTPONED

Inability to Get Speakers Here on Time

Will be Held at a Future Date to be Announced Later

After a week's effort to obtain prominent state speakers, the banquet of the Charlevoix County Republican club has been postponed until some future date, which will be announced later.

Considerable work had been done toward pulling off of the event, but it was found impossible to get an open date with any of the speakers whose names had been placed on the program.

CITIZENS DREAD INDEPENDENCE DAY

Revolt Against Method of Celebrating the Fourth

"INCENDIARIES DAY" PROPER NAME

Scores of Human Beings Made Dependent for Life

Use of Explosives on Our Public Streets Should be Prohibited Have Sane Celebration.

Independence day is coming; day of powder poisoning and lockjaw; day of hospitals and ambulances; day of mutilation, fire and death. If there is anything that is sane in the American people it is the growing revolt against our insane manner of celebrating the Fourth of July. It might be called "Incendiaries Day" for on that day the fire-bend runs riot. No man having any public responsibility fails to dread it. No fire department gets through the day, and the night on both sides of it, without exhaustion. It is doubtful that on some fifth of July an entire city may complacently burn itself up in the faces of firemen and fire hucres too exhausted by silly firecracker fires the day before to cope with it. The fire-lighting apparatus of our cities and towns is so overtaxed by the numberless call which begin on the evening of the third that response to possible summons for help by neighboring towns or cities is impossible.

Never an "Independence" day but scores of human beings are made dependent for life. Life and limbs are jeopardized by explosives thrown from windows above the level of the street, setting fire to clothing and menacing the eyesight of those passing, while upon the child, who in his innocent love of noise and objective demonstration responds to our present absurd kind of celebration, falls the heavy hand of disaster. When our civilization was not so complex, it was possible for those who had the courage to leave their homes to the mercy of possible conflagrations, to shut them up and escape to the quiet of the country. Not so today. The trolley car and the automobile follow the seeker after peace to his country retreats, throwing explosives at his head as they roar past in their reckless irresponsibility.

And for what? Nobody stops to inquire. Nobody any longer cares. We have gotten wholly away from educational significance of "Independence" day, and lost ourselves in an orgy of fire and noise.

It is, perhaps, too much to expect any sudden return to sanity; but some effort at least may be made by cities and towns toward leading their people into more moderate and intelligent forms of celebration. If explosives must be used the authorities can limit their use to the public parks during certain hours of the day, where the folly-hunters may kill and maim themselves and each other to their heart's content, without injuring other people, or destroying property by fire. The firing-out-of-explosives among the closely built shingle-reced frame houses, which compose the greater part of our cities and towns, is wholly in accord with the reckless spirit of the Americans regarding fire.

If before every Fourth of July all cities and towns were given a thorough cleaning of rubbish, and all use of explosives restricted as to time and place, the police and fire wardens might at least have a fighting chance to minimize the disastrous results of our public folly during the years it may require to inspire our people a desire for a rational kind of celebration. And such a desire must be inspired. It (Continued on page 4.)

IF WOMEN ONLY KNEW

What a Heap of Happiness it Would Bring to Charlevoix Homes.

Hard to do house-work with an aching back. Brings you hours of misery at leisure or at work.

If women only knew the cause of that Backache pains come from sick kidneys.

"I would save much needless worry. Doan's Kidney Pills cure sick kidneys. Many residents of this vicinity endorse them."

Mrs. H. D. Campbell, 333 State St., Traverse City, Mich., says: "I gave a public statement some years ago recommending Doan's Kidney Pills and telling of my experience with them. At this time I gladly confirm that testimony. I have found Doan's Kidney Pills for superior to any other remedy I have ever taken for kidney complaint. I had such a satisfactory experience with them that I advise other kidney sufferers to give this remedy a trial."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster-McMillan Co., Buffalo, New York, sole agents for the United States.

Remember the name—Doan's—and take no other.

The average farmer needs to do a lot more work with his pen. He must know, not guess, the profit and loss.

Orchard and Garden.

Plan for a variety of vegetables. Try Swiss chard, kale, endive, Brussels sprouts and others not usually found in the home garden. Vegetables which are liked the best by your family should be planted in succession.

Such crops as peas, bush beans, sweet corn, beets and radishes should be planted at intervals of ten days or two weeks to supply a succession.

There is too much handwork in most home gardens. So much is unnecessary. A seed drill will sow in a few minutes as much as can be planted by hand in one hour. Many farmers who do not have seed drills could easily afford them. They sow more regularly and at a more uniform depth than is possible by hand.

Do not plant lima beans in the open until the ground is quite warm. The bush limas are becoming more popular and are planted at same distances as ordinary bush beans.

Take chances in planting some sweet corn ten days or two weeks earlier than usual. If it falls the loss will be slight, and if there is no mishap the gain may be great.

If some cucumbers have been started under glass a planting of seed should also be made in the open to insure a crop late in the summer and during the early fall.

Hubbard squash should be more generally grown and used on town and country tables. When properly cooked and seasoned it is a delicious vegetable and is available for use from October until June. The hills should be 8 by 8 feet apart and covered with rotten manure unless the land is quite fertile.

They may also be grown in rows eight feet apart, drilling the seed and thinning plants to about two feet.

National Stockman and Farmer.

General Utility of Mules.

In feeding mules it may be well to remember that they will keep fat on about three-fourths the allowance of a horse of the same weight, that they will eat up roughage and their grain ration will only be about two-thirds that of a horse.

When it comes to daily care and attention the mule will live where the horse will soon die.

These large eared friends are also more sure footed than the horse, resist heat and flies better and do not choke or cough so easily.

The objection many farmers raise to the use of mules is that they do not breed, that they are stubborn, often vicious, and that they are entirely unsuited to pleasure purposes.

Those objections are worthy of consideration, but the many good qualities of these sturdy beasts seem to more than offset them.

Haphazard Farming.

The man who says that dairying doesn't pay is the man who never uses the Babcock test and keeps no record of his individual cows' doings. He is the man who thinks because he keeps twenty cows he ought to get so much milk without any thought upon his part. If you are keeping animals which are eating up the profits of good milkers in the same herd, why not find it out right away and get rid of the lazy ones?

Importance of Bone and Muscle.

The farmer raises cattle and hogs with a view of rapid development of fat, but the horse is used for mechanical power and should develop great bone and muscle. Muscular development cannot be attained in close confinement, and the young animal should not be tied to a stall and fed corn and timothy hay to fatten him for the shambles.

A Horse Pointer.

Did you ever notice that when out in the field a horse always stands with his feet away from the wind and starn? Here is a pointer for you. Hitch your horses with their heads away from the wind.

The Hum of the Hive.

The principal products—honey and wax—were never in greater demand than at the present time, and bee-keeping bids fair to see a higher rank among the productive industries than as hitherto been accorded it.

There is but one kind of honey for the farmer to produce for his own use, and that is "chunk" comb honey cut out of the frame and put into jars to be kept.

When a queen is no longer young some foolish beekeepers think that they should look ahead and procure a future queen bee. The queen is frequently complicated. Keep only young queens. It is simply a lesson taught us by the wisdom of the bees.

The long idlers may be turned to good account by the handy man in the mending of papers, etc., that may not be in use. The work can be done thoroughly, as there is no hurry as in the summer when the whole of the paper and fitting are upon active service, so to speak.

Don't set the hives in neat rows, with the entrances all facing one way. They can be placed in pairs, but the pairs should be scattered as widely as possible. This is an important point, but it should take a page to explain all the whys.

It is well to open up and ventilate the hives regularly for an hour or two after dark and to sweep and gather up any dead bees that may have accumulated on the outer floor.

Why be content with ten or twenty pounds of surplus honey per hive when a little careful manipulation will mean seventy-five or even 100 pounds from every prosperous colony in a good season?

Not Very Accomplished.

CHAPTER X—Continued.

"Yes, Roland," Sam agreed meekly, "you mustn't keep your friend from his business. I'm glad you looked in, sir. You'll call again, I hope."

"Thank you," said Burham, moving toward the door.

It was too much for Roland's sense of opportunity. He rolled in Burham's wake sullenly reluctant. "Say, Mr. Burham," he exploded as they got to the door, "if you'll just offer Sam five—"

"That will do," Roland collapsed as if punctured. Burham turned to Graham with a wave of his hand. "I'm leaving on the afternoon train, but if I get time I may drop in again and talk things over with you. There might be something in that thrashing machine you mentioned."

"I'll be glad to show you anything I've got here."

"All right. Good day. I'll see you again, perhaps."

This cavalier snub was lost on Sam.

"I'LL BE GLAD TO SHOW YOU ANYTHING I'VE GOT HERE."

an essential of whose serene soul is the quality of humility. He followed them to the door as grateful as a lost dog for a stray pat instead of a kick. "Good day, sir. Good day, Roland," he sped their parting cheerfully.

But it was a broken man who shut the door behind them and turned back, frowning his gray chin.

"Perhaps Mr. Burham was right. Only I was kind of hopin'— Now, Mr. Lockwood over there—"

He shook himself to throw off the spell of depression.

"Well, well! He's kind, very kind. With this young man in here and everything gettin' fixed up and new stock comin' in— I'm sure Mr. Lockwood

"ONLY MEN SENSE OF DUTY SUSTAINED HIM."

"I see it the right way for us. He's kind, very kind."

Thus it was that he presently called up the stairs in a very cheerful voice, "Hello, are you pretty near through up there?"

The girl's weary voice came down to him without accent. "Yes, father at last."

"Well, then, you keep an eye on the store, please. I'm going to step out for a minute."

"Yes, father."

"And if anybody asks for me I'll most likely be down to the depot with Mr. Duncan."

He didn't mention that he contemplated calling on Lockwood, because he feared it might worry Betty.

Betty knew, or, rather, divined. And she had no hope, no faith such as under Sam what he was. She came down the steps listlessly. Only her sense of duty sustained her. She owed something to old Sam for the gift of life, disdained though she found it. He needed her. What she could do for him she would.

Sighing, she went to work. In work only could she forget. The sash glasses needed cleaning and the sash jars replenishing, for the new order of sashes had come in the previous evening.

After a time, to a tune of pounding feet, Tracey Tanner pruned into the shop with all the graceful abandon of a young elephant feeling its oats. His face was fairly scarier from exertion and his eyes bulging with a sense of importance. "The girl looked up with out interest, nodding slightly in response to his breathless 'hello, Betty'."

"Father's gone out," she said, holding a glass to the light, suspicious of the tint from her dish-towel.

"I know—seen him down the street." The boy halted at the counter, producing a handful of square envelopes. "Note for you from the Lockwoods. Betty," he panted, "Jesse ask me to bring it round."

Betty put down her glass in consternation. "From the Lockwoods?"

"Uh-huh." Tracey offered it, but she withheld her hand, dubious.

"For me, Tracey?"

"Uh-huh! It's a divination. I got four more to take." He thrust it into

"JESSE ASK ME TO BRING IT ROUND," her reluctant fingers. "Go free, real ly, but one of em's for me."

"An invitation, Tracey?"

"Yeh. Hope you have a good time when it comes off. Already he was bounding toward the door. "Goodbye."

"But what is it, Tracey?"

"Aw, it tells in the divination. Along."

"From the Lockwoods?" she whispered. Suddenly she tore it open, her hands unsteady with nervousness.

The envelope contained a square of heavy cardboard of a creamy tint with scalloped edges touched with gold. On the face of the card a round and formless band had traced with evident pains the information:

MISS JOSEPHINE MAE LOCKWOOD— Requests the pleasure of your company at a lawn tea and dance to be held at the residence of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. George Lockwood, Saturday, July 12, at 8 p. m.

It. S. V. P.

The envelope fluttered to the floor, while the card was crushed between the girl's hands. For a moment her face was transfigured with delight, her eyes blank with rapturous visions of the joys of that promised night.

"Oh—! 'nd be grand!"

Then suddenly the light faded. Her eyes clouded; her face settled into its discontented lines. She stuffed the card heedlessly into the pocket of her dingy apron and took up another glass.

affliction through squinting at the silver dollar to make sure none of its milking had been worn off. I have never known the man to wear anything but a rusty old frock coat, black, of course, and black and shiny broad-cloth trousers, with a hat that has all ways a gleam of dust so thick that it seems a mottled gray.

He grunts his words, a grunt to each. He grunted at Betty when he saw her. "Where's your father?"

She put down her glass and dish rag. "I don't know, sir."

"Don't know, eh?" he asked in an indescribably offensive tone.

"I think he went to the bank to see you."

"Oh, he did, eh? Did he have anything for me?"

The girl took up another glass. "I don't know, sir," she said wearily. "I'm afraid not."

"Well, if he didn't there's no use aces' me. It won't do him any good."

"I guess he knows that," she returned, with a little flash of spirit.

"Does, eh? Well, that's a good thing—saves talk. You don't do no business here, not to speak of, do ye?"

"No, not to speak of."

"Then what's the good of all this foolishness, flin' up?"

"I don't know."

"Costs money, don't it?"

"I guess so."

"And that money belongs to me."

"It's Mr. Duncan's doing. Father ain't paying for it. He can't."

"What's he doin', then? Sittin' round foolin' with his inventions, ain't he?"

"Yes."

"What's he inventin' now?"

"I don't know much about it." She pointed to the model beneath the window.

"That's the last thing, I guess."

Blinky snorted and stamped over to the window, stooping to peer at the machine. "What's the good of that?" he demanded, disdainful, and without waiting for her response went on dangle. "Foolishness! That's what it is. Why don't you tell him not to waste his time this way?"

"Because he likes it," said Betty hopelessly. "It's the only thing that makes life worth while to him. So I let him alone."

"What difference does that make? It don't bring him no nothin', does it? No, sree, it don't. What does he do with them things?"

"Patents them."

"And then what?"

"Nothin' that I know of."

"That's it—nothin', nor ever will. Well, he's been gettin' money from me for these patents I thought at first there might be somethin' in 'em. But he wou't any more."

She interjected a significant "Huh!"

He broke off abruptly, pale with anger.

"Well, I want to see him, and I want to see him before noon," he snapped.

"I'm goin' over to the bank, an' if he knows what's good for him he'll come there pretty darn quick."

He swung on one heel and slouched out as Betty turned to go upstairs.

BLINKY LOCKWOOD

Presently she reappeared, planning on her and little hat, and left the store.

It was upward of an hour before she returned, walking quickly and very erect with her head up and shoulders back, her eyes suspiciously bright. Even old Sam, who had returned from the depot after missing Blinky at the bank—even he blud as he ordinarily was, saw instantly that something was wrong with the child.

JOY TO THE BANKER'S HEART

The dependable man is the one that brings joy to the bankers heart. He is the kind that the bank likes to do business with. Whatever the size of the obligation, be it $5 or $5,000, if a man cannot meet it when due, he should be at the bank "on the dot" and explain why. The bank is always ready and willing to explain anything in connection with its own business and expects its customers to do the same. No man should have anything in his business which he cannot lay bare before his banker. The joy of the banker's heart is the man who may be absolutely depended upon first, last, and all the time. If any young man starting in business has an idea that character is not a business asset of the highest order, let him talk to some banker about it and he will have cause to change his mind. We solicit the business of dependable men.

THERE is a state law which requires, under penalty, the destruction of noxious weeds in each county. Notices are now being posted in the various townships this county requiring the cutting of such weeds before the first of July. This does not mean that a property owner shall allow noxious weeds to grow until that date, but the intent of the law is that all noxious weeds shall be cut before they ripen and go to seed. The law is being complied with in some cases, but in others it is being carelessly disregarded, although in all cases not intentionally. This law was enacted for a good purpose and every property owner should serve his own interest by seeing that the law is rigidly enforced.

There are many tracts of vacant land within the limits of Charlevoix where noxious weeds are allowed to thrive and right here in the city above all other places, this condition should not be allowed to exist. There is considerable vacant property owned by outsiders which is naturally neglected but in these cases, if the owner does not comply with the law, the authorities are required to cut the weeds and charge the cost against the property. There are many resident owners in Charlevoix who may not be familiar with the law and unconsciously neglect to destroy harmful vegetation. If these will give a little more care to their premises, it will result in benefit not only to themselves but to the community.

NEW JUVENILE BOOKS

Gift of Mrs. Edson Keith and Children to City Library

The city library was the recipient of a generous gift of between 175 and 180 books, last week from Mrs. Edson Keith of Chicago, Ill. in behalf her children, Kathryn and Frederick. The collection consists mostly of juvenile works from the most popular writers of the day. The balance is composed of historical novels and other interesting fiction. The books arrived in two shipments and were from the personal library of the donors, who have won the hearts and genuine expression of thanks from our young readers, as well as of the citizens of Charlevoix.

New books are being constantly added to the library and during the summer months, it has been so arranged that the copies of the latest fiction can be obtained by paying a rental fee of five cents per week. This money is applied to the purchase price of the books and when paid from rentals the books will be free for public use.

is the duty for every city to arrange for its people suitable amusements or exercises definitely calculated to educate them in a rational observance of this historic holiday. Habits of folly can be most easily eliminated by a substitution of something better. The things a city can do to interest its citizens in a sane and wholesome celebration is unlimited, and municipalities, which, in the past two years, have taken steps in this direction, are already receiving national praise for their wisdom and high sense of civic responsibility.

Independence Day of 1911 is coming. To what city, what town, what mother or father is it this year to bring suffering or sorrow the day after?

KNIGHTS OF COLUMBUS

Steamer Algonah Took Large Crowd to East Jordan

About four hundred pleasure seekers from Harbor Springs, Petoskey and Charlevoix took part in the second annual Knights of Columbus excursion to East Jordan last Sunday.

When the party reached East Jordan, they were met by the band and a large throng of town people, and the Knights marched to the Catholic church, where the priest gave an address of welcome and the ladies of the church furnished a sumptuous dinner in a nearby grove.

One of the features of the day was a ball game between the East Jordan independent team and the Petoskey Knights of Columbus, East Jordan winning by a score of 7 to 3. The excursion was a success in every way.

THE GUERNSEY POPULAR.

Breed Has Won Public Favor by High Class of Product.

The foundation of the Guernsey breed of dairy cattle was laid amid the surroundings of the economical dairy conditions prevalent on the island of Guernsey. The introduction of the Guernsey into this country was induced by a realization of the high class of her dairy products, writes W. M. Caldwell in the Breeder's Gazette. First she came into the hands of the private estate owners, who were desirous of the rich and highly natural colored products for their own use. Gradually as this desirable characteristic of the Guernsey was better known she was more sought for.

The first real public introduction of the Guernsey was at the World's fair

The Guernsey cow Dairyland of Pleasant had the world's first yearling of the breed, a yearling of the year 1902 produced from a pair of Guernsey cows, making 1,062 pounds of butter. This cow is owned by W. W. Marsh, Waterloo, N. Y.

In 1892, this and the Pan-American model breed test at Buffalo in 1901 are possibly the best instances of public rating which the products of the dairy breeds have ever had. In the Buffalo tests the Guernsey cows were awarded the prize for net profit in butter fat and the prize for net profit in churned butter. They not only showed the greatest profit, but also made butter at the least cost per pound and returned the greatest profit for every dollar invested in feed.

To the American Guernsey Cattle club belongs the credit of establishing the first measure of ability of the breed of cattle upon the basis of net production of butter fat and that for one year's time or a period that shall test the true worth of a dairy cow. During the last six years 1,112 records have been made. These show an average of 8,051.20 pounds of milk, 409.75 pounds of butter fat and 5,121 per cent of butter fat.

Besides the dairy breed test which has been referred to the latest one in which the public has been interested is that of the great Iowa state dairy cow contest. In this the Guernseys have led. The three cows producing the greatest amount of butter fat during the year were Guernseys. This is but another corroboration of the sterling qualities of the breed.

How to Feed Oilmeal.

Oilmeal may be fed to all classes of farm stock. Cattle and steers will use to great advantage from two to three pounds of oilmeal daily in connection with other feeds. Feeding oilmeal in the form of nut sized cakes is considered preferable to the loose meal by most of our steer feeders. Dairy cows will consume one or two pounds of oilmeal daily with their grain ration, and during the winter feeding period more or less oilmeal is almost indispensable in order to keep the cows in the best condition for producing milk and butter fat. For growing calves, sheep and hogs oilmeal can constitute about one-fourth of the grain ration fed and prove very beneficial. Horses may be fed small quantities, although its general use for horses is not recommended.—Professor Humphreys in Wisconsin Bulletin.

BROWN ROT CONQUERED.

Belief That Worst Foe of Stone Fruit Growers Is Under Control.

The Rural New Yorker says that brown rot, the most destructive fungous disease known to the peach orchardist, has finally been put under control. J. H. Hale of Georgia and Connecticut paid his respects to the brown rot disease in the following terms: "The brown rot is so great a factor for evil in the raising of peaches for the market that in a few years more it would have accomplished the complete failure of my orchard plant in the state of Georgia. We can master or control every other enemy of the peach by up to date methods and precautions, but until now we have had no weapon that would touch the brown rot fungus." And then he continued to say that "the use of the self boiled blue sulphur spray as a foliage treatment for the peach tree, recently discovered by W. M. Scott of the United States department of agriculture, alone would swing the future status of my fortune from failure to success."

The importance of this spray to Mr. Hale reaches to every other peach grower in the country, with somewhat less force, except perhaps, to orchardists in the arid regions of the west where the climatic conditions are unfriendly to the career of the destructive fungus. In the early peach section of Georgia the work of Mr. Scott means the restoration of prosperous peach growing, where recently the industry has had to be abandoned solely on account of brown rot. Gradually in the past fifteen years the peach belt has been pushed farther south into the humid regions of Georgia for the sake of producing earlier fruit. It is here that the rot has worked the most utter ruin.

While in general it is true that the coastal plains are hardest hit, it is a fact that wherever there are stone fruits raised in abundance there is brown rot present, waiting only the weakening touch of the friendly dampness to bring it to life, when in a few days it will devour a large part of all the profits of the orchard. In a recent year D. M. Wertz of Waynesboro, Pa., a large orchardist located in the mountain region, where peach trees are assumed to be comparatively safe from brown rot, lost twenty carloads, or about one-third of his crop, from a sudden outbreak of the fungus.

A man is not master of his farm unless he has a familiarity with each acre's value and each acre's ability. It is useless in these days of high priced land to bother with average yields. It is not wise to wait until compulsion causes one to take care of the fertility of the soil.

Feeding Mangels.

The use of roots and especially mangels for dairy cows is still undervalued in many portions of the United States and Canada. The English farmers say that mangels should not be fed until they have been stored about three months for the reason that during the period of storing the mangel gains much in sugar.—Hoard's Dairyman.

Chemicals With Manure.

This is the very some of them use manure with fertilizer is to go on the crop: A load of manure is put in the spreader and thirty to forty pounds of the chemicals scattered over it. The result is that the whole thing is evenly scattered.—Rural New Yorker.

The Way With Weeds.

Possession is said to be nine points of law. This is certainly true of weeds. When they once get possession of a field it takes about nine times the labor to get rid of them than would be needed if they had been held in check from the start.

Map out a plan for farm operations for the ensuing year and then stick to it until you have a better.

The Michigan high judiciary is facing a lumpy, not to say hideous situation owing to a recent legislative enactment, and the arbitrary execution of it by Governor Osborn. Of course it is well known, the supreme court is the arbiter and interpreter of the law and its constitutionality. Recently the legislature made residence of supreme justice at Lansing obligatory, and now those justices must decide whether or not they must obey that mandate, or whether the law is righteously enacted. JAMES BUCKLEY DEAD

Stricken by Death Suddenly Thursday Morning

Postmaster at Petoskey and is Well Known Here

James Buckley, postmaster of Petoskey and one of the early pioneers of this section, dropped dead at his home at the Clifton House in that city Thursday morning. About one o'clock Thursday morning he was found by his son, suffering from an attack of acute indigestion. After some local remedies had been used a physician was called and in a short time complete relief was obtained. He ate his breakfast with great relish and chattered with his family during the meal hour and a little later went into the wash room where he was stricken and died a half hour later, the immediate cause being from gas pressure on the heart and other ailments from which he had suffered for years.

Mr. Buckley has been most intimately identified with the business, official and political interests of Emmet county for many years and his influence has always been felt in every enterprise of every description.

James Buckley was a native of Michigan, having been born at Detroit 19, 1840, and was almost 71 years of age, but notwithstanding his affliction, was alert, energetic and always was in close touch with all matters pertaining to his office as postmaster and all other city, county, state and national affairs, being a close student of civic and political matters. He was born on a farm near Lawrence and lived there until the Civil war broke out, when he was one of the many to enlist to go. After serving his full time there he came back to Chicago where he took a business course, later accepting a position as bookkeeper in a large lumber firm. Soon after he went to Petoskey where he has lived ever since.

In addition to his long and honorable career as a citizen and official in the county, Mr. Buckley had a remarkable and honorable record as a Mason, having been made one on December 16, 1868, or, almost forty-three years ago.

The funeral services were held from his home at the Clifton House at Petoskey, Sunday afternoon at two o'clock.

"Why, Betty," he cried in solitude as she flung into the street—Betty dear, what's the matter?"

For an instant she seemed speechless. Then she tore the hat from her head and cast it regardlessly upon the counter. "Father," she cried—"father," and gulped to down her emotion. "Can you get me some money?"

"Money? Why, Betty, what?"

Her foot came down on the floor impatiently. "Can you get me some money?" she repeated in a breathless tone. "Well—er—how much, Betty?" He tried to touch her, to take her to his arms, but she moved away, her sorry little figure quivering from head to foot.

"Enough," she said, half sobbing—"enough to buy a dress—a nice dress—a dress that will surprise folks!"

"But tell me what the matter is, Betty. Wanting a dress would never upset you like this."

She whipped the cracked and crumpled card from her pocket and pushed it into his hand.

"HE'LL COME PRETTY DARN QUICK."

It into his hand. "Look at that!" she hunched him and turned away, struggling with all her might to keep back the tears.

He read, his old face softening. "Josie Lockwood's party, eh? And she's sent you an invitation. Well, that was kind of her, very kind."

She swung upon him in a fury. "No, it was not kind. It was—no! It was mean!"

"Oh, Betty," he begged in consternation, "don't say that. I'm sure—"

"Oh, you don't know! I heard the girls talkin' in the postoffice—Angie Tutthill and Mame Garrison and Beesie Gabriel. I was round by the boxes where they couldn't see me, but I could hear them, and they were laughin' because I was invited. They said the reason Josie did it was because she knew I didn't have anything to wear, and she wanted to hear what excuse I'd make for not goin'. Ah, I hear them!"

"Oh, but Betty, Betty," he pleaded, "don't you mind what they say. Don't!"

"But I do mind! I can't help mindin'. They're mean." She paused, her features hardening. "I'm goin' to that party," she declared tensely. "I'm goin' to that party, and—and I'm goin' to have a dress to go in too! I don't care what I do—I'm goin' to have that dress!"

Sam would have soothed her as best he might, but she would neither look at nor come near him.

"Well, see," he said gently. "We'll see, I'll try."

She turned on him, exasperated beyond thought. "That only means you can't help me."

"Oh, no, it doesn't. I'll do what I can."

"Have you got any money now?" He bug his head to avoid her blazing eyes. "Well—no—not at present, but here's this new stock and—"

"That doesn't mean anything, and you know it. You owe that note to Mr. Lockwood, don't you? And you can't pay it!"

"Not today, Betty, but he'll give me a little more time, I'm sure. He's kind, very kind."

"You don't know him. He's as mean—as mean as dirt—as mean as Josie."

"Betty!"

"Then if you did get any money you'd have to give it to him, wouldn't you?"

"Yes, but I'm sure—I think it'll come all right."

"Ah, what's the use of talkin' that way? What's the use of talkin' at

"NOW DON'T SAY THAT."

Sam had dropped into his chair, unable to stand before this storm; he stared now, mute with amazement, at this child who had so long, so uncomplainingly, shared his poverty and privations, grown suddenly to the stature of a woman—and a tormented, passionate woman, stung to the quick by the injustice of her lot. He put out a hand in a feeble gesture of placation, but she brushed it away as she bent toward him, speaking so quickly that her words stumbled and ran into one another.

"I can't understand it," she raged. "Why is it that I have to be more shabby than any other girl in town? Why is it that the others have all the fun and I all the drudgery? Why is it that I can't ever go anywhere with the boys and girls and laugh and—have a good time like the rest do?"

Sam bent his head to the blast. In his lap his hands worked nervously. But he could not answer her.

"It ain't that I mind the cookin' and doin' the housework and—all the rest—but—why is it you can never give me anything at all? Why must it be that every one looks down on us and sneers and laughs at us? Why is it that half the time we haven't got enough to eat? Other men manage to take care of their families and give their children things to wear. You've got only us two to look after, and you can't even do that. It isn't right, it isn't decent, and if I were you I'd be ashamed of myself."

Her temper had spent itself, and with this final cry she checked abruptly, with a catch at her breath for shame of what she had let herself say. But, childlike, she was not ready to turn her sorrow, and she turned her back, trembling.

Sam, too, was shaken. In his heart he knew there was justification for her indictment, truth in what she had said. And he was heartbroken for her. He got up unsteadily and put a gentle hand upon her shoulder.

"Why, Betty—"

A dry sob interrupted him. He pulled himself together and forced his voice to a tone of confidence. "Just be a little patient, dear. I'm sure things will be better with us soon. Just a little more patience; that's all. Why, there was a gentleman here this morning from New York city talkin' about an invention of mine."

The girl moved restlessly, shaking off his hand. "Invention!" she echoed bitterly. "Oh, father! Everybody knows they're no good! You've been wastin' time on 'em ever since I can remember, and you've never made a dollar out of one yet."

He bowed to the truth of this, then again launched up bravely. "But this gentleman seemed, quite interested. He's over to the Bigelow House now. I think I'll step over and have a talk with him."

"You'd much better go and have a talk with Blinky Lockwood," she told him brutally. "He's waitin' for you at the bank and said he wasn't goin' to wait after 12 o'clock neither!"

"Well, perhaps you're right. I'll go there. It's after 12, but—"

He started to get his hat and stopped with an exclamation. "Why, Nat! I didn't know you'd got back!"

Duncan was at the back of the store clearing the last remnants of the old stock from the shelves. "Yes," he said pleasantly, without turning. "I've been here some time cleaning up the cellar to make room for the stuff that's comin' in. I came upstairs just a moment ago, but you were so busy talkin' you didn't notice me."

He paused, except the empty shelves with a calculating glance and came out around the end of the counter. "Everything's in the shop shape," he said. "I checked up the bill of lading myself, and there's not a thing missin'—not a bit of breakage. Mr. Graham," he continued, dropping a gentle hand on the old man's shoulder, "you're givin' to have the finest drug store in the state within six months. With the stuff that Sperry has sent us we can make Kalamazoo & Lee look like a cheap store. I'm goin' to have things here in this old shop, and don't you forget it."

He laughed lightly, with a note of encouragement. But he avoided Graham's eyes even as he did Betty's. He could not meet the pitiful look of the former, any more than that stare of hostility and defiance in the latter.

"It's good of you, my boy," Graham quavered. "I—but I'm afraid it won't."

"Now don't say that," Duncan interposed firmly. "And don't let me keep you. I think you said you were going out on business? And I'll be busy enough right here."

And, without exactly knowing how it had come about, Graham found himself in the street, stumbling downtown toward the bank.

When he had gone Duncan would have returned to the shelves for a final redding up. He desired least of all things an encounter with Betty in her present frame of mind. With a sudden movement she threw herself in front of Duncan.

"So you were listenin'?"

"I'm sorry," he said unhesitatingly. "I didn't mean to hear anything," he argued plaintively. "I was in the room before I understood and by the time I did it was too late—you had finished."

"Oh, don't try to explain. I—I hate you!" she continued.

He held her eyes inquiringly. "Yes," he said in the tone of one who solves a puzzling problem. "I believe you do."

She looked away, shaking with passion. "You just better believe it."

"But," he went on quietly, "you don't hate your father, too, do you, Miss Graham?"

"What do you mean by that, Mr. Duncan?"

"I mean," he said, faltering, "I'm going to give you a bit of advice. Don't you talk to your father again the way you did just now."

"Well, you ain't me!" she cried savagely. "You ain't me! Understand that? When I want advice from you I'll ask for it. Until I do you let me alone."

"Very well," he replied so calmly that she lost her bearings for a moment. And, inevitably, this, emphasizing as it did all that she resented most in him—his education, wit, address, his advantages of every sort—only served further to infuriate the child.

"Oh, I know why you talk that way," she said, rubbing her poor little hands together.

"Do you?" he asked in wonder.

"Yes, I do you!"

Suddenly she found words—poverty stricken words. It's true, but the best she had wherewith to express herself. And for a little they flowed from her lips, a scalding, scathing torrent. "It's because you go to church all the time and try to look like a saint—and—and try to make out you're too religious for anything and like to hear yourself givin' Christian advice to poor miserable sinners like me. You think that's just too lovely of you. That's why you said it, if you want to know. Folks wonder what you're doing here, don't they? Guess you know that, and like it too. It makes 'em look at you and talk about you, and that's what you like. I could tell 'em. You're only here to show off your good clothes and your finger nails and the way you part your hair and—and all the other things you do that nobody in New York would pay any attention to."

"A pretty good guess at that," he acknowledged candidly.

"Yes, it is, and I know it, and you know it. Oh, it's easy enough to give advice when you've got plenty of money and fine clothes and—"

"I understand," he said when she paused to get a grip upon herself and find again the words she needed. "You needn't say any more. The only reason I said what I did was because I'm strong for your father and—well, I wanted to do you a good turn too."

"I don't want your apologies."

"All right. Only think over what I said some time."

"I'll be a good reason for saying what I did."

"I know you had."

"How do you know?"

"Because I'm not what you think I am altogether."

"I guess you're not," she snapped. "But I don't mean what you mean. I mean you think I'm conceited and rich and don't know what trouble is. Well, you're mistaken. Many's the time I've dodged round corners to avoid meeting men I knew would invite me to have dinner or luncheon or a drink—or soda—or something—for fear they'd find out that I couldn't treat in return. Many a time I've gone hungry for days and weeks and slept on park benches until an old friend found me and took me home with him."

She eyed him with attention.

Ironton Grange No. 707.
Ironton Grange No. 707 met in regular session June 13, 1911, with an attendance of 65.
One application for membership was received.
One candidate was instructed in the first and second degrees and and three candidates in the third and fourth degrees.
The grange voted to give $10.00 toward the building of the "grange home" on the fair grounds, and are thinking of taking up another public collection.
A committee was appointed for an exhibit of fruit for the fair.
The lecturer's hour consisted of songs, stories and recitation. The lecturer gave Flora charge of the program for next meeting.
The grange was then closed in regular form to meet again in two weeks.

Harmony Grange No. 1451.
Harmony grange at its regular meeting received one application for membership. Also decided to hold the contest supper at our next regular meeting to be held June 27. According to the terms of the contest the side led by O. D. Willson is to furnish the supper and the winning side led by Sister Leller is to furnish the program.
There was a general discussion of the subject of recreation. It was thought to be a personal matter as to what recreation consists of and also of the amount needed, but it was generally conceded that the average farmer does not take enough for his own good.

Horton Bay Grange No. 338.
Horton Bay Grange met in regular session Friday evening, June 16, with 13 members present. Meeting called to order by Worthy Past Master George Long. Minutes read and approved.
They voted to move the grange back to Horton Bay where they were first organized. A short program consisting of a recitation by Albert Batuke, reading by Eva North, reading by Josie Stolt and singing by the grange.
Meeting closed in form to meet again July 7 at Horton Bay in Mrs. West's store building.

Nine Outside Cities to be Represented—Fine Program Arranged.

Next week Wednesday and Thursday, June 28 and 29, our city, or more particularly the Baptist constituency thereof, will welcome and entertain delegates from all Baptist churches in the Grand Traverse region, including Traverse City, Kingsley, Alden, Kalkaska, Eastport, Gaylord, Boyne City, Harbor Springs, and Petoskey.
A good program of six sessions has been arranged, and in addition to many of the delegates who appear thereon, the following noted speakers will be present and give addresses: Rev. John E. Smith of Kalamazoo, Rev. Josiah Roberts and Mr. Magnus Burgess of Detroit, Dr. J. G. Atkinson of Chicago, and Mrs. McGaule of Burnham. The last named speaker will give a stereopticon lecture on Burnham Thursday evening. It is expected there will be about sixty delegates in attendance. A most kindly and general invitation is extended to all our citizens to be in attendance, whenever possible during this convention.

DROPPED DEAD

Death Came Suddenly to Jacob Weyburn
Saturday Evening

Jacob Weyburn, a resident of this city for over 30 years, dropped dead in Myers Cigar store Saturday evening about 7:30 o'clock.

Mr. Weyburn was a native of New York state and was 72 years of age at the time of his death. He was well known throughout this vicinity, and some years ago was in the laundry business on Antrim street. For the last four or five years he has worked for F. J. Meach.

The funeral services were held Monday afternoon at 3:00 o'clock and his remains were laid to rest by the side of his wife at Brookside cemetery.

A Commonplace Occurrence

It Changed the Course of Two Lovers

By HUDSON C. EASTON

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

Walking on an avenue in Washington I met a lady whose appearance attracted me. She suddenly stopped, looked down and blushed to the roots of her hair. Her skirt had become unloosened at the waist.

"Can I do anything for you?" I asked.
She looked wildly about her for a plan and finally caught one. "Have you a pin or a bit of string in your pocket?" she asked.

I went through every pocket and at last found a piece of corn colored ribbon that had bound together a package of cigars. I handed it to her with an expression which asked the question, "Will that do?"

She seized it, at the same time thanking me with a nod which plainly meant, "Proceed on your way."

If I had not happened to have that piece of cheap ribbon in my pocket, if that lady's skirt had not become unloosened at the exact moment I passed her, I would now be surrounded by an entirely different environment.

While I was sufficiently impressed with the young lady's appearance—her face was one that I would not easily forget—the incident soon passed out of my mind. Several months passed. One day I made a business trip to Philadelphia and on my return was sitting in a train waiting for it to move out of the station. Hurrying along outside was the girl I had assisted in her difficulty, and on her corsage was a bit of corn colored ribbon tied in a bowknot. At that moment the train began to roll slowly on its wheels.

Two conflicting emotions stirred me. First, I inferred that the girl in meeting me had met her fate and was wearing the ribbon so that if we should cross each other's path again I would recognize her; second, it was impossible for me to learn anything about where she might be found. I didn't know whether or no she lived in Philadelphia where I saw her for the second time, whether she lived in Washington or some different locality from either. Why had I not left the train and rushed after her? Because I had but a few seconds to decide the matter, and in that brief space of time my mind was obviously occupied with reasons why I should not do that very thing. My business required that I should reach home on that train. If I got out and followed the girl—quite likely I would lose her in the crowd.

A new element had entered into my being. A girl had fallen in love with me, so I believed, at first sight, and was wearing a token by which I might recognize her. Probably she lived in the United States, in which at that time there were more than 70,000,000 people. I had no other information concerning her except that she was wearing a bit of ribbon that had held together a package of cigars. Was not this quite enough to awaken in me a strong desire to find her? The romance of love is fed by the imagination. I lived, as it were, in air castles. The girl wearing my ribbon was the princess that the prince was hunting all over the world, and to whom he was at last led by the fairy. True, my first meeting with my princess was especially unromantic. Nevertheless I wished that some kind fairy would conduct me to her.

One day I told my friend Calkins about my adventure. He listened to me with great interest till I had finished, then exclaimed:

"So you're the man that was wanted by 'Corn Colored Ribbon'?"

"What do you mean?"

"Some months ago—I don't know how long—I was reading the personals in a newspaper and came across one signed 'Corn Colored Ribbon.'"

"Who? What? When? Where?" I exclaimed excitedly.

"Which one of those unintelligible questions do you wish me to answer first?" asked Calkins.

"All of them."

"I remember nothing but that a lady who had met with an accident advertised for the address of a gentleman who had assisted her, and the address was signed as I have told you."

"Calkins," I said fiercely, "you will remember in what paper and when you saw that ad or me.

"Then my doom is sealed," laughed Calkins, "for I can remember neither."
Could there be anything more tantalizing—a lovely woman trying to find me, I trying to find her, and all our efforts availed?

"Oh, why have I not read all the personals," I cried, "in all the papers every day?"

"Because you couldn't have done anything else," replied Calkins, "and, not having time to make a living, you would have starved to death."

"Can't you suggest something?"

"Yes; forget all about it. A woman who would advertise like that is probably an adventuress anyway."

"If you say that again I'll strangle you."

"Truth crushed in the throat would rise again."

"She is pure as an angel. Come, old man, tell me some way to find her."

"I give it up."

Several weeks passed in tussle for me, when in a Philadelphia newspaper I read of the trial of a Miss Octavia Merton which was soon to come off in that city. She was accused of having stolen some valuable gems while one of a house party at a lady's country seat. What was my astonishment to see in a description of Miss Merton the following words:

In her corsage she wears a bow of orange or corn colored ribbon.

I sprang to my feet. I had found my love. But, alas, Calkins was right. She was an adventuress. Her personal, taken together with this charge, was conclusive proof of this.

And yet the item said that she was a member of the house party. This indicated that if she were a thief she must be a lady, and a lady of the upper classes would not be likely to advertise for the address of a man she had met on the street.

I hurriedly wrote a note to an attorney in Philadelphia whom I knew, asking him to keep me posted as to the coming off of the trial in which I was so deeply interested. In reply I received a telegram stating that it was down on the calendar for the next day. I went to Philadelphia that night and the next morning appeared among the spectators in a back seat where I would not be observed.

When the accused was led into court I recognized her at once for the girl I had been seeking. She was very pale and appeared to have suffered much. I could not see if she wore the ribbon, for an outside coat was buttoned over her chest.

I listened eagerly to a statement of the case made by the prosecuting attorney. The girl was a member of a house party; the jewels were missed, and she afterward wore one of them that the owner claimed was hers. Miss Merton's counsel claimed that it had for years been his client's property. He also said that on the day the jewels were stolen she had taken a flying trip to Washington, but since her object in going there was secret she had kept a knowledge of her trip from every one who knew her. "Were it not for this secrecy, your honor," concluded the attorney, "we could easily have proved an alibi."

Jumping from my seat, I hurried down to the rail, called for the attorney and in an undertone gave him the points of my meeting with the accused in Washington. He at once put me on the stand and in a series of questions drew out my evidence. When he asked me for the date of this meeting I was puzzled, but finally recalled it as the day of an important meeting to which I was going when I met Miss Merton.

"Did anything pass between you and the accused?" he asked.

"Yes, something passed between us that will corroborate my story if she still possesses it. I gave her a bit of corn colored ribbon."

With that Miss Merton threw open her coat and displayed the token.

There was suppressed applause among the spectators. The attorney put his client on the stand.

"Why do you wear that ribbon?" he asked.

"I have worn it ever since I have been accused, hoping that the gentleman who gave it to me might see it and by proving that I was in Washington on the day the jewels were stolen exonerate me. I also advertised for his address, but received no reply."

Of course there was an acrimonious without the jury leaving the box. I was taken by Miss Merton's counsel to his client and introduced to her. I had been mistaken in her object in wearing the token, but if she had done so for the reason I had supposed she could not have given me a warmer assurance of the hand or a look with more heart in it.

"Just think," she said, "had it not been for you, I would have been convicted."

"It was a close call," said the attorney, who seemed as much relieved as his client.

"Fate," I said, "had a purpose in bringing about the very commonplace accident that occurred just at the moment we met."

If my words referred to her vindication then referred to something beyond. That she understood my meaning was evident from a blush.

And now I am back to what I said in the beginning of this story with regard to those slight happenings which will at times turn the whole course of our lives. When Miss Merton's skirt came unfastened I was a clerk in the treasury department in Washington. Now I am that lady's husband and the father of her children. I reside in Philadelphia and am a banker there. What would I have been had not that accident changed the course of my life? Doubtless a lone old back and a government clerk.

BROKE HIS LEG

Water Tank at P. M. Depot Falls Upon William Hyde

Tuesday forenoon while a gang of men in the employ of the P. M. railway were putting a new foundation under the water tank near the depot, the supports gave way letting the tank fall over. A number of men were under the tank at the time of the accident, and all got out from under it when the crash came excepting William Hyde, of Grant, who was caught by a falling timber breaking both bones of his right leg just above the ankle and badly spraining his left ankle.

The injured man was taken to Dr. Thelen's office, where the fracture was cared for.

In viewing the wreck it seems almost incredible that the men were able to get out from under it at all, the only thing saving them, is that the tank in falling lodged against the terrace.

FRANCIS H. DODDS IS VERY BUSY

Looking After the Best Interests of the State—Introduces Several Bills

Representative Dodds introduced these bills Tuesday. For Boyne City, Charlevoix county, $85,000 for federal building, $10,000 already secured for site for Mount Pleasant Isabella county, $50,000 for building and site; for Greenville, Monticello county, $50,000 for building and site.

Last year he secured $50,000 for enlargement of the Traverse City federal building and $50,000 for building and site at Grand Rapids, also $10,000 for site at Boyne City.

That Mr. Dodds is looking after the best interests of Michigan has been in evidence for a long time—Mancelona News.

SOLID CONCRETE ROAD ADOPTED

Wayne County Leads in State for Good Roads

HAS FORTY MILES OF PAVEMENT

And Will Build 35 Miles of Concrete Road This Year

Other Cities About State Who Have Used Concrete for Paving—Estimated Cost

Six hundred men with thousands of dollars worth of improved labor saving machinery, are at work making Wayne county's road as smooth as the good city paving.

They already have 40 miles of the road built; will finish 35 miles more this season, and have $2,000,000 available for use in the next few years—as fast as it can be used economically. It is estimated that this money will build something like 200 miles of road.

The standard road as adopted by the county road commissioners of that county is a solid concrete road mixed with one part of Portland cement, two parts sand and four parts stone. This is now put down at a cost of $1.25 per square yard, or not over one-half the cost of the city paving, and the commissioners believe it is just as good. To prevent "buckling" from heat, open spaces are left across the roadway every 25 feet, and to prevent the concrete from wearing off at the edges, the concrete is reinforced with a steel strip, which protects and which the commissioner believes will wear even with the concrete. The concrete in the principal roads is 10 feet wide.

The cost of a mile of concrete depends on the width of the concrete. A 16-foot road costs about $13,000 a mile.

Go out Gratiot, Woodward, Michigan, Grand River avenues or other main thoroughfares and you will find stretches of completed work or in course of construction. You will find this road hard, smooth and a delight for drivers of any sort of vehicle. It is the purpose of the road commissioner to extend this class of road on every main thoroughfare to the county line.

Every person in Wayne county is to live on or within three miles of a good road within the next four or five years, is the plan outlined by the commission when it began operations as a county body four years ago. Michigan avenue will be concreted all the way to Wayne; Woodward avenue to the county line on the north; Grand River to Redford and Mack and Jefferson avenues to the east county line.

Next year it is hoped to complete Michigan avenue, the longest road in the county, to the Washtenaw county line; Fort street to Eureka and Van Dyke; Mt. Elliott and Grand River avenues to the county line.

Roads which a few years ago were absolutely impassable during the season of spring and fall rains because of seas of mud and water which collected on their surface and ankle deep in dust in the warm dry seasons, are now dry in all seasons and furnish an ideal passage way in all weathers.

The good roads movement has seized Wayne county and other parts of the state in a grasp that will not be shaken off. Taxpayers who a few years ago objected strongly at the prospect of increased taxes, when they weren't laughing at the prospect of "throwing so much good money away in darned experiments," as they expressed it, have become the most ardent disciples for good roads. They can see actual profit in dollars and cents from the campaign of thoroughfare building as inaugurated by the county commission.

It is not unusual to hear farmers, and especially those engaged in trucking, say, "I tell you, since the new road was built they have disposed of one or more horses, because they found that a great deal less motive power was needed than in the old days of mud."

"I can see an actual saving of $100 per year," said one man recently, "because where I formerly had to have two horses to haul my loads to the city, I now have only one. The cost of the extra horse cost me $100 per year."

The voters of Wayne county were told that good roads would be built at a smaller cost than they could be built for otherwise and the commissioners are making good on the statement.

The money for building roads in the past has come from a direct tax on all property in the county. As the limit of such taxation is only 50 cents per $1,000, the burden has not been great on anyone. Hereafter, however, the work will be taken care of from the $2,000,000 bond issue authorized by the voters at the election of last fall. Of this $2,000,000 is available this year; there will be $500,000 for each of the next three years, and $300,000 for the fifth year.

The roads have been divided into three classes for improvement: the trunk, or main roads leading into the city; the secondary or next important thoroughfares leading from the main roads to the larger centers of population and the tributaries, connecting the others. The main roads, are being improved first, then the secondary and last the tributaries.

Wayne county now has 40 miles of concrete, brick or macadam roads.

Concrete road 16 feet wide has been adopted as the standard road. Its cost is about $13,000 a mile.

Forty miles of road have been built.

Thirty-five miles are to be built this year.

Concrete roads will be extended to the county line on every main thoroughfare and on many cross roads.

Two million dollars will be expended in the next five years.

It is expected to have a total of about 300 miles of good concrete roads when that money shall have been spent.

The city of Alpena in 1909 laid four blocks of concrete pavement on their main streets at a contract price of $1.55 per square yard, and the pavement is now in a first class condition. Last year (1910) they laid three more blocks of concrete on one of their main streets, and have now under construction eight blocks more. The opinion of the city officials is that concrete, when properly laid is "THE PAVEMENT."

For the last two years the city has done its own work at an estimated cost of $1.42 per yard.

On June 19, the common council at Monroe passed a resolution authorizing the paving of one of their main streets with concrete, and have another street under consideration.

The city of Charlotte has eight blocks of concrete pavement, and speak very highly of it. Jackson and Monroe have several streets paved with concrete. The city of Ann Arbor has between three and four miles of concrete paving.

Lansing is about to start paving several streets with concrete, and it is rapidly gaining in popularity on account of its low cost and lasting qualities.

WILL HOLD CITY ELECTION

East Jordan is Vote on New City Charter July 24

Document Approved and Signed by Governor Osborn

East Jordan will have its first taste of real city government on Monday, July 24, when the qualified electors of the city will be called upon to pass upon the city charter and elect a city mayor, two commissioners and two justices of the peace.

A primary election will be held at the town hall on Monday, July 10, and the two persons receiving the highest number of votes for each of the different offices will be the candidates at the July 24th election. Persons who desire to become a candidate must obtain and file the necessary blanks not later than June 30.

The charter has been approved by Governor Osborn and it is now up to the citizens to say whether it is satisfactory or not.

The defect of the charter as will be presented to the people means a lot of delay and heavy expense to the village, and will also delay many needed improvements.

AS STATE'S WARDS

Dependent Children Will be Better Cared For

Secretary Murray Prepares to Inspect Almshouses—May Force Counties to Act

Under new laws, the state's supervision, over neglected, homeless and dependent children promises to be much more efficient and Secretary M. T. Murray of the state board of corrections and charities expects ultimately to work out a system by which state officers will keep in touch with every one of these friendless little ones until their future is definitely arranged.

The new laws require reports from county agents and probation officers relative to all cases coming under their jurisdiction and another section making it mandatory that institutions placing out children, first secure the approval of county agents for the proposed home. It also requires the agents to make reports to the board relative to the treatment of the children.

Under another law the day of placing minors in county jails is at an end. As revised by the legislature it prohibits counties from using lockups for detention places for children. Families must be provided to take charge of the minors. A detention building, especially for minors must be procured. As the statute makes it a misdemeanor to violate the act it is not believed that any municipality or county official will take a chance.

Reports coming in indicate the vigorous campaign which Secretary Murray has waged during the last year against decrepit, unsanitary and crowded almshouses is having effect. Two trips into most of the counties of the state were made by the secretary during the year. County officials were prodded in an attempt to remedy conditions at county infirmaries, which were buildings of a character hardly fit for stables to say nothing of their use as homes for aged and infirm persons.

Not all counties are included in the category of course, but many were. Since then, however, Secretary Murray has received notice of the erection of new infirmaries in three counties and plans for improvements and additions at several others.

In a week or so Mr. Murray will start out on another trip of inspection with increased authority under acts passed by the last legislature and action will be taken against those counties who have failed to remedy conditions since the last inspection.

So-called maternity hospitals are brought directly under the supervision of the board and the local health boards under amendments to existing laws. One change requires that these institutions must secure a license from the local health officers, while another requires reports relative to every child born at the hospitals and authorizes an inspection and investigation by the board or its secretary.

ANOTHER LANDMARK GONE

Old Butter Bowl Factory Near Ferry Seed House

Monday evening at about 11 o'clock fire was discovered in the old butter bowl factory near the Ferry seed house, and before the fire department could cover the distance, it was almost burned to the ground.

This was one of the oldest landmarks, having been built about 25 years ago. It was used for a bowl factory for about 10 years, when operations ceased and for the last four or five years has been used as a store house.

The building was owned by G. S. Williams of Boyne Falls who formerly operated the factory.

A gasoline hunch owned by Mr. Williams which had been stored in the building during the winter was also burned. Cause unknown.

They were of the Haverland variety and grown on his land on South State street.

AN ENVIEABLE RECORD

Congressman Dodds Votes on All Important Questions

Not the Kind of Man to Dodge the Issue, as Records Show

Congressman Dodds has had opportunity to declare his position on several occasions in the national home of representatives, and his vote is recorded on every important question during his term of office. He is not the kind of man to dodge the issue. His record will show, too, that he has not been controlled either on the one side by the big interests of the country or on the other by popular opinion of the hour. He has followed the independent, conscientious conviction, after thorough deliberation of Francis H. Dodds—and none other.

The stand he took on the Canadian reciprocity matters seems to be applauded by the farmers generally and by a large portion also of the business and professional and laboring men of this state. He cannot see the justice in forcing the farmers as a class into free trade with Canada—and this, even though the tariff should be removed from articles produced by manufacturers, which the farmer must himself purchase; in other words, he believes that the removal of the tariff from the products of the farm would be a direct blow at the farmer, and that the removal of the tariff from the products of the home manufacturer—to whom and to whose employees the farmer is furnishing supplies—would be another blow, which, though coming indirectly, would be almost as effective.

Mr. Dodds is not opposed to having the people elect their senators direct—in fact he strongly favors it; but he wants the federal government to retain the control it now has over the election of United States senators, under section four of article one of the constitution. Knowing that the desire for the election of United States senators by popular vote was almost without exception in the house, and being strongly in the majority therein, the Democrats made up their minds to tack on to this measure another—a pet scheme of theirs—that would amend the constitution so that Congress would lose all control over the election of senators, and this combined both measures were forced through the house. The Democrats voting solidly for same, and many Republicans voting with them fearing that if they voted otherwise their votes would be misunderstood and taken as hostile to the popular election of United States senators. But Mr. Dodds would not stand for this, and was one of the few Republicans who dared to vote against the combined measures—being strongly in favor of one, but radically against the other.

'NOTHER PIPE "BUSTED"

Water Main Being Repaired at Corner of Park and Water Streets

Saturday afternoon the water main burst at the corner of Park and Water streets and men have been working steadily ever since to get the broken pipe out and put in a new one. This is an extremely difficult and slow job as after the pipe is uncovered the joints which are soldered has to be melted before the section can be removed. It is said that this is the fifth section that has given out since it was laid last fall, which if true, would look as if the city had been bunched on their pipe deal as it is a pretty expensive thing to make these repairs so often.—Boyne City Journal.

FREAK CHICKENS

Salubrious Climate Causing Consternation Among Poultry Fanciers

Talk about freak chickens, Charlevoix has the state skinned to a frazzle. Hugh McCartney, one of our leading poultry fanciers, has a four legged chicken of the White Leghorn variety. The freak is about eight weeks old and is as healthy and as vigorous as a chicken could be, considering the two extra legs it has to carry around. The chicken is well formed, the only difference from the others is that an extra pair of legs has grown on its left side and stick straight out parallel with his tail, and are not used in walking or running about.

Still another—J. M. Felts has a five-week old chicken of the Barred Rock variety, whose feathers have grown in wrong side up, the tips all pointing to its head. If the Poultry association has another show this year, there is no telling what this city will produce in the poultry line.

BAD FIRE AT BOYNE

Three Million Feet of Lumber Goes Up in Smoke

Charlevoix Fire Engine Does Effective Work From Deck of Tug

Boyne City was the scene of one of the worst fires in its history last Friday night. The fire started in the center of the lumber yard at Mill No. 1. About two million feet of the best lumber, mostly maple, along with 600 cords of slabs were destroyed entailing a loss of between $40,000 and $50,000, partially insured. The docks burned were the forwarding and transfer. These were valued at $10,000.

The cause of the fire is supposed to have originated from someone smoking in the yard.

A strong east wind kept the fire from the mill, which otherwise would have undoubtedly been destroyed.

Messages for help were wired to the neighboring towns and East Jordan and Boyne Falls responded with a portion of their local fire departments and equipment. Assistant Fire Chief Lou Otto and a number of our fire boys loaded the big Sissy fire engine upon the Tug Taylor, and did very effective work from the water front. The fire engine was kept on the decks of the Taylor and moved from point to point where the fire was the hottest.

The reflection of the fire was visible for many miles. The loss was a heavy to the Whites, as it took a large portion of the best lumber in the yards and just at a time when shipping is at its height.

MASONIC DOINGS

Prominent Masons Take Part in Big Meeting at Petoskey

About 150 prominent Masons from all over this section of the country assembled at the Masonic temple in Petoskey last Thursday afternoon to participate in one of the greatest Masonic functions ever held in the state.

Seven members of the grand council were present. The Royal Master degree was conferred upon 27 candidates, and the Select Masters degree was conferred and exemplified by the grand council officers. After supper the Super. Excellent degree was given the already half seasoned timber by the local council.

About 20 of our local masons attended the meeting leaving here in the afternoon in four automobiles.

After the work has been completed, a treat will be served. Turn out K. of P's and help out in the work.

WATCH OUT FOR CODDLING MOTH

Warning Given by Bureau's Horticulturist, C. E. Smith

ORCHARD DEMONSTRATION A SUCCESS

Fruit Growers Shown How to Protect Their Orchards

Outdoor Lecture Listened to With Keen Interest by Many Who Fire Volley of Questions

The orchard demonstration held at the farm of William Withers of Marion township, Thursday was an unqualifying success, although not a large number were present to witness the work. C. E. Smith, graduate of the M. A. C. and the bureau horticulturist gave a practical demonstration of spraying and pruning and much valuable information was gleaned from the many questions asked of him.

To fruit growers who are struggling along trying to apply the teachings of state and government bulletins in their ceaseless warfare against spores, gophers, insects, etc., it is worth a good deal to hear Mr. Smith's orchard lecture and have him identify directly such orchard faults as sun scale, canker, bark louse, bud moth, coddling moth and numerous other infections.

First, Mr. Smith took his audience on a tour through the orchard examining tree after tree and pointing out where insects had been working and trees affected by scale and fungus growth.

The orchard in which the demonstration was given was in fairly good condition, with the exception of the damage by the bud moth. Go through your orchard and carefully look at the leaves. If you find them rolled up into a little cube and inside what appears like a cocoon, the bud moth has visited you and there is no telling the damage he has done to your trees. Spraying for the bud moth should be done just as the buds are opening, using two pounds of arsenate of lead to 50 gallons of water. With this spray Mr. Smith advises the using of lime and sulphur for controlling the apple scale.

Now is the time to watch out for the coddling moth. Did you spray early for them? If not, your trees should have been sprayed early, just as the petals are falling off and little apples were forming. At this time the calyx is wide open allowing the spray to reach the center of the apple. Over 90 per cent of the worms are found here, and spraying, by all means, should be done at this time. Use three pounds of arsenate of lead and one and one-half gallons of lime and sulphur solution to 50 gallons of water, (diluted). This spray should again be used about the second week in August, when the coddling moth is again active in his operations. Of course this spray can be omitted on early varieties of apples such as Astrachans, Transparents, Dutchess, etc.

The oyster shell louse was also found, not bad, but enough to put it in check. For these louse spray early, before the buds are open with a lime and sulphur solution, one gallon to eight gallons of water.

The demonstration of pruning fruit trees was interesting and valuable. The core should begin when the trees are started, and the features to be aimed for are: An evenly balanced tree top; a height of not to exceed 20 feet, as the practical limit for either spraying or fruit gathering; to thin out branches to allow opportunity to reach interior leaves with sprays, at the same time to let in the sunshine to help develop the fruit and to minimize fungus growth. Trim close so the sap can heal the wound, cut both top and bottom to avoid splitting, paint with white lead oil sears over one and one-fourth inches across.

Mr. Smith also explained how to exterminate the peach and plum "worm," the larvae of the plum curculio, which has long been recognized as a serious pest to these fruits.

The plum curculio in the adult stage is a small, rough-backed beetle about one-fifth of an inch in length. (Continued on page 3.)

DON'T EXPERIMENT

You Will Make No Mistake if You Follow This Advice

Never neglect your kidneys.

If you have pain in the back, urinary disorders, dizziness and nervousness, it's time to act and no time to experiment. These are all symptoms of kidney trouble and you should seek a remedy which is known to cure the kidneys.

Duan's Kidney Pills is the remedy to use. No need to experiment. It has cured many stubborn cases in this vicinity.

Can Charlevoix residents demand further proof than contained in the following testimonial?

George Hulbrook, Main and Danforth streets, Mancelona, Mich., says: "Duan's Kidney Pills helped me wonderfully. I had an extremely lame back and there were acute pains in my legs when I stood or lifted. My kidneys also bothered me considerably. After using Duan's Kidney Pills, the lameness left my back and the kidney secretions became regular in passage. Since then I have been free from kidney disorders and consequently, I have no hesitation in giving Duan's Kidney Pills my endorsement."

Literary Notes

July Woman's Home Companion.

The July Woman's Home Companion contains the first of a series of articles describing intimately the girlhood of some of our most famous women singers. The first article is on Lillian Nordica. Other artists who are to be included in the series are: Mary Garden, Hesse Abbad, Emmy Destinn and Schumann-Heink.

The July Companion contains a number of articles which convey information of value to housekeepers in the summer season. Among these are articles on "How to Cook Summer Vegetables" and "Good Salads for Summer." These articles in addition to numerous contributions to the fashion, household, home decoration and handicraft departments make a great collection of useful and interesting reading.

There are 10 stories in the number, which are varied and entertaining. Some of the contributors of fiction are: Zona Gale, Charles Bartlett Loomis, Grace S. Richmond, Jennette Lee, C. N. and A. M. Williamson and Mary Hastings.

A special feature is the color work in the July Companion. One notable illustration in color is a full page reproduction of a painting by F. Hopkinson Smith entitled "The Leaning Tower of San Castello."

"Do Women Want to Vote," "Tenors and Canoeing," "My Happiest Vacation," and "The Canvas Villa" are the subjects of further interesting contributions.

"The Doctor's Page" contains advice by an eminent physician as to how to keep well in summer.

The Subject He Liked Best.

SPRING HOTBEDS.

Simple Suggestions For Starting Things Growing at Home.

To have or not to have a hotbed must be decided on either early in the season. March or early April should see a large one "on tap." The elaborate ones are expensive and require almost constant attention. If left to themselves they freeze by night and broil by day, and that great is the gain thereof perhaps does not greatly matter to one who gardens only in a small way. But that is a question one must decide for oneself, says the Country Gentleman.

If the one is a woman and the bed can be placed only a few steps outside the snappy window where she spends the greater part of her days sewing, reading or planning dainty dishes against the homecoming of the man the effort may be worth while. It means to uncover in the early morning before the sun reaches the bed, to shade at noon, to let in air later, to replace the glass as the sun declines, to know how and when to water and while the nights continue cold to cover at dusk with matting or even thick carpets. If you do not want to confront this trouble and the expense try a few shallow boxes covered with panes of glass in the house.

The windows of the kitchen are by all odds the best, as the air is properly dense and moist. If you have had little experience, which we are supposing you have not, do not try asters and fine flower seeds in this way—only common, easily grown seeds. The others would almost certainly "damp off," die or come up so slim and sickly that they would never amount to anything.

Or, infinitely better than the home boxes, if you possess or can easily come by an everyday window sash—even one 3 by 3 feet will do—this can be fitted on to a rough box from the grocer's and the whole set on a heap of manure where the sun will reach it early and late. With this a few radishes, lettuce and fine flower seeds can be successfully grown. Never put it in a northern exposure and do not have less than full three inches of sifted earth on top of the manure. More is better. Do not try the small bed very early. Wait until April forgets to be coy with winter; then with moderate care the small structure should make a difference of several weeks toward getting things into bearing of leaf or blossom.

BOTTLED TIME.

Bottled time is a choice dish to serve at planting, haying and harvest season. Now is the time to preserve it. Gather it in idle days by putting everything in perfect order for the work later on.—New England Homestead.

THIN OUT YOUR FRUIT.

Desirability of the Practice Illustrated by Superabundant Plum Yield.

The illustration, reproduced from the Long Island Agronomist, shows a branch cut from a botan (Japanese) plum tree in full bearing. It was pruned to show the heavy yield and one reason why fruit should be thinned.

Fruit growing in such abundance is sure to deteriorate. Proper thinning before the product is permitted to develop is followed by fruit of superior size and quality, commanding higher prices if marketed or affording greater table delight if consumed at home. This is a point neglected too frequently by farmers and fruit growers who complain of yields that are too abundant and of inferior quality.

Don't joy ride in your automobile when you ought to be moving the manure in your barnyard out into the hungry fields.

Stimulating an Old Tree.

An old tree that is injured needs very much to be stimulated. You can do this by cutting back well and fertilizing and cultivating it. You should give it a dressing of wood ashes and ground bone or acid phosphate, with some barnyard manure added. If possible loosen the soil around it early in the spring and if the weather is dry water it occasionally.

Mulching Berry and Flower Beds.

In mulching strawberry beds, flower beds or trees and shrubs be careful to select a material for the mulch that will not "bake."

THE SWINEHERD.

A mixture of a little salt, charcoal, ashes and air slaked lime has a good effect on parasites of the digestive system of either young or old pigs.

If the pigs develop a lighter bone than that possessed by the sire and dam, then there is something wrong with the feeding. Pigs must have bone and muscle forming feed and should never be allowed to lose their baby fat.

No animal on the farm will respond to kind treatment quicker than the hog, and kind treatment means a good deal in the accumulation of marketable meat.

Smaller pigs are kept stunted if left with the larger, stronger ones by being crowded from the feeding troughs.

It pays to grade the pigs carefully. Put the smaller ones by themselves and give extra care.

Mildy Corn Produces Stagnant.

The Kansas experiment station has just issued a bulletin giving results of experiments to determine the cause of mild stagers in horses. It is not certain which micro-organism present in mildly corn produces the trouble, but it comes from that kind of corn. No matter which one is responsible, we can avoid it by feeding only sound grain to horses and using moldy stuff for less sensitive animals if it is used at all.

Keep Cattle Comfortable.

There are many farmers who always shelter their cattle from storm, but there are raw, cold, windy days which harm them as much as storms. Don't let them cringe in pasture corners, clustered together for warmth on such days. Put them in the shed or barn.

VALUE OF COW TESTING.

One dairymen produced $2400 worth of milk from twenty cows, or $120 per cow, while a neighbor bestowed twice as much labor on forty cows and sold only $1,800 worth of milk, or $45 per cow, barely paying expenses, while the first man made a profit of over $4000. Yet the second man said he had no time to spend a few minutes each day weighing and testing the milk from each cow. Instead he spent four long, weary years in rising and harvesting the crops on a big new farm and feeding and milking forty cows to make as much profit as his neighbor did in one year with half the cows, half the feed and half the labor. —The Farmer, W. J. Fisher, University of Illinois.

Made Him Still More Silent.

Kossara Svetkovitch, who confessed to having murdered her husband, was sent to prison for one month by the Krugoyevskoyes. Kossara proved that on her wedding day her husband and forbidden her to speak to him unless he first addressed her. During four years he had spoken to her only seven times and then to use words of blame. At table he indicated his want by pointing to them. He had never even looked at their two children and professed not to be aware of their existence. The jury recommended her to mercy.—Belgrade Cor. Full Mail Gazette.

The Buttermaker.

Absolute cleanliness is the first requisite in making good butter; sanitary surroundings, cool, neat, and right temperature, with attention to details in the care of cream tins.

CHAPTER XI—Continued.

"But it's your father I wanted to talk about," he hurried on. "I'd bet a lot he knows more than any other man in this town, and besides, he's a fine, square, good hearted old gentleman. Anybody can see that. Only he's got one terrible fault—he doesn't know how to make money. And that's mighty tough on you—though it's just as tough on him. But when you roast him for it, as you did just now, you only make him feel as miserable as a yellow dog, and that doesn't help matters a little bit. He can't change into a sharp business crook now; he's too old a man. Before long he won't be with you at all, and when he's gone you'll be sore on yourself sure if you keep on throwing it into him the way I heard you, and that's on the level."

"I-I won't do it again," she faltered, twisting her hands together. "Bully for you!" he cried and, with an abrupt if artificial resumption of she clasped her arm timidly. His businesslike air, turned away to a showcase to spare her the embarrassment of his regard.

"I didn't think," said the voice behind him; "I didn't mean to do something happened that almost drove me wild and—"

"I know," he said gently.

After a bit she spoke again, "I'll go up and get dinner ready now."

He heard her footsteps as she crossed to the door and opened it. There followed a pause. Then she came hurriedly back. He faced about to meet her eyes—shining with wonder. She grasped his arm timidly.

"I've slept on Park bench."

"I wanted to ask you," she said hastily, "if—was it this friend you spoke about—that found you in the park—who set you on the road to for tune?"

"That's what he said," Duncan answered whimsically.

CHAPTER XII.

DUNCAN went home for his mid-day meal. It wasn't much of a walk from Sam Graham's store to Miss Carpenter's, and he didn't mind the least.

On this particular day he was sincerely hungry, but he had much to think about besides, and between the two he just bolted his food and made off hotfoot for the store.

Naturally, knowing nothing about Sam's note, although he knew Pete Willing by sight as the sheriff and town drunkard in one, it didn't worry him at all to discover that gentleman tacking toward the store as he hurried up Beech street, eager to get back to his job. The first intimation that he had of anything seriously amiss was when he entered, following Pete.

Pete Willing, sheriff and town drunkard, is the best natured man in the world, as a general rule. Drunk or sober, Radville tolerates him for just that quality. On only two occasions is he irritable and unmanageable—when his wife gets after him about the drink and when he has a duty to perform in his official capacity.

Tell, gann, gangling and loose jointed, Duncan, returning to the store from lunch, found Pete standing in the middle of the floor, hands in pockets and a noisome stogy thrust into a corner of his mouth.

"I'm sorry about this, Sam," he belatedly, "but there ain't no use wastin' words 'bout it. I'm here on business."

"But what's the matter, sheriff?" Graham asked, his voice breaking.

"Ah, you know you got a note due at the bank, don't you?"

"Yes, but—"

"Well, it's protested. Y' understand that, don't you? I'm here to serve the papers on to you."

"But—but there must be some mistake," Sam clutched blindly for his hat. "I'll step over and see Mr. Lockwood. He's always been kind, very kind."

"Naw!" Pete bawled. "Mr. Lockwood don't want to see you unless you can settle. Y' got to put up or git out. I got orders from him soon's I got judgment to close y' up. And that goes, see."

"To—to turn me out of the store, Pete?" Graham's world had slipped from beneath his feet. He was over-

"YOU GOT A NOTE DUE AT THE BANK," wheeled. And it was with a child's look of pitiful dismay and perplexity that he faced the sheriff.

The father who has fallen short of his child's trust and confidence knows that look. To Duncan its appeal was irresistible. He had his hand in his pocket, clutching the still considerable remains of what Kellogg had termed his grubstake, before he knew it.

"But—there must be some mistake," Graham repeated pleadingly. "It can't be. Mr. Lockwood surely wouldn't—"

"Now, there ain't no use whinin' about it!" Willing roared him into silence. "Law is law, and— Ha ceased quickly, surprised to find Duncan standing between him and his prey.

"What?" he began.

"Wait!" Duncan touched him gently on the chest with a forefinger at the same time catching and holding the sheriff's eye. "Are you?" he inquired quietly, "laboring under the impression that Mr. Graham is deaf?"

"What?"

Duncan turned to Sam apologetically. "He said 'what.' Did you hear it, sir?"

But by this time Pete was recovering to some degree. "What'da you got to say about this?" he demanded crescendo.

"I'll show you," Duncan told him in the same quiet voice, "what I've got to say if you'll just put the soft pedal on and tell me the amount of that note."

"With interest and costs," he said less stridently. "It figgers up three hundred 'n' eighty dollars 'n' eighty-two cents."

There's no use denying that Duncan was staggered. For the moment his pulse deserted him utterly. He could only repeat, as one who dreams, "Three hundred and eighty dollars!"

His momentary consternation afforded Pete the opening he needed. The room shook with his regained sense of prestige.

"Yes, three hundred 'n' eighty dollars 'n'— Say, you look a-her!"

Again the calm forefinger touched him and—

"Listen," begged Duncan. "If you've got anything else to tell me please retire to the opposite side of the street and whisper it. Meantime be quiet."

Duncan turned and made for the soda counter, beneath which was the till. His scanty roll of bills was in his right hand and there crouched it, stepped behind the counter, told Sam watching him with an amazement no less absolute than Pete's, pulled out the till, bent over it with an assured air and pushed back the coin slide. Then quite naturally he produced with his right hand his four hundred and odd dollars from the bill drawer, stood up and counted them with great deliberation—

PETE TURNED BACK THE LAPEL OF HIS COAT

"One, two, three, four."

He smiled winningly at Pete. "Four hundred dollars, Mr. Sheriff. Now will you be good enough to hand over that note, and the change and then put yourself and that pickle you're wearing in your face on the other side of the door?"

"I ain't got the note with me, Mr. Duncan."

"Then perhaps you won't mind going to the bank for it?"

Half suffocated, Pete assented, "Aw, right, I'll go and git it. Kin I have the money?"

"Certainly," Duncan extended the bills, then on second thought withheld them. "I presume you're a regular sheriff?" he inquired.

Very proudly Pete turned back the lapel of his coat and distended the chest on which shone his nickel plated badge of office. Duncan examined it with grave admiration.

"It's beautiful," he said, with a sigh. "Here."

Gingerly Pete grasped the bills, thumbing them over to make sure they were real and bolted us for his life, his coat tails level on the breeze. There floated back to Duncan and old Sam his valdictory, "Waal, I'll be d-d-gasted!"

"With a short, quiet laugh Duncan made as though to go out to the back yard, where the new stock was being delivered.

"I'm going," he said hurriedly, "to find me a butcher and knock the stuff out of some of those packing cases. Want to get all that truck in doors before nightfall, you know."

But old Sam wasn't to be put off by any such obvious subterfuge as that. He put himself in front of Duncan.

"Nat, my boy," he said, tremulous, "I can't let this go through. I can't allow you!"

"There, now," Duncan told him unconcernedly, yet kindly, "don't say anything more. It's over and done with."

"But you mustn't. I'll turn over the store to you!"

"O Lord!" Duncan's dismay was as genuine as his desire to escape Graham's gratitude. "No—don't! Please don't do that!"

"But I must do something, my boy. I can't accept so great a kindness unless," said Graham, with a timid dash of hope, "you'll consider a partnership!"

"That's it!" cried Duncan, glad of any way out of the situation. "That's the way to do it—a partnership. No, please don't say any more about it just now. We can settle details later. We've got to get busy. Tell you what I wish you'd do while I'm hurrying open those boxes. If you don't mind going down to the station to make sure that everything's—"

"Yes, I'll go; I'll go on once." Sam groped for Duncan's hand, caught and held it between both his own. "If—if fate or something hadn't brought you here today I don't know what would have happened to Betty and me."

"Never mind," Duncan tried to soothe him. "Just don't you think about it."

Graham shook his head, still bewildered. "Perhaps," he stammered on, "to a gentleman of your wealth $100 isn't much."

"No," said Duncan gravely without the flicker of an eyelash, "nothing." He remembered well the few dollars that now represented all his worldly goods. Then he smiled cheerfully. "There, that's all right."

"To me it's meat everything. I—I only hope I'll be able to repay you some day. God bless you, my boy! God bless you!"

He managed to jam his hat awry on his white old head and flung his way out, his hands fumbling with one another, his lips moving inaudibly, perhaps in a prayer of thanksgiving.

It was perhaps within the next thirty minutes that Betty (who had been length. They spend the winter under trash in and around the orchards and about the time the fruit buds are swelling and blossoms opening, come out of their winter quarters and as soon as the fruit is well set, attack it for feeding and laying purposes, and also feed on the unfolding leaves and blossoms. Egg laying is the most active the first four or five weeks after it puts in its appearance. From three to five days is required for hatching and the resulting larvae bores into the fruit, usually reaching the pit, where it feeds until it completes its growth. When full grown the grub leaves the fruit and enters the ground, where it remains until it reaches the stage of a full grown beetle. In some sections a sheet is placed under the tree on the ground and the beetles jarred from the tree. This should be done in early morning and late evening, and continue until few beetles are caught. Spray with arsenate of lead, two pounds to 50 gallons of water, not once, but three or four times.

Study your crops, each fruit grower has different conditions in his orchard. Don't spray once and let it go at that. Spray your orchard seven or eight times during the season, and spraying all trees whether bearing fruit or not. Mr. Smith says he has found no evidence of San Jose scale in Charlevoix county but warns all fruit growers to be on the constant watch for it.

Secretary John F. Gibson gave an interesting lecture in the evening at the grange hall, and spoke at length on the work of the bureau and what it had accomplished in western Michigan, which was greatly appreciated by those present.

An Electric Whistle.

An ingenious fireman at Everett, Mass., has constructed an electric fire whistle. Heretofore this town has used the steam whistles of different factories, but when these whistles failed them it was found necessary to seek a substitute. The electric whistle which has been adopted consists of a series of diaphragms, eight in number, each vibrated by sixteen small electromagnets. The diaphragms with their coils are mounted one above the other, and all are housed in a cylinder, open at the top, from which the sound issues in great volume.

Uses of Asbestos.

Asbestos is insoluble in acids and incombustible. It is a poor conductor of heat and electricity and is not affected by dampness, so that it is applied to many purposes. It is used for building material, pipe coverings, shingles, insulating tapes and boards, fireproof ropes and curtains, packing for fireproof safes and packing for steam engines, as well as in paint and cement.

The Oil Palm Tree.

The oil palm of Liberia survives the burning of brush around it when land is cleared for cultivation.

left in charge of the store while Duncan, with coat and collar off and sleeves rolled above his elbows, knicked and pounded and pried and banged at the packing cases in the back yard sought him on the scene of his labors.

"Pretty good work for a York dude—not?" he laughed.

There was a shadowy smile in her grave eyes. "It's an improvement," she said evenly.

He shot her a curious glance. "Ouch!" he said thoughtfully.

"I just came to tell you," she went on, again immobile, "you're wanted inside."

"Somebody wants to see me?" he demanded of her retreating back.

"Yes."

"But who?"

"Blinky Lockwood," she replied over her shoulder as she went into the house.

"Lockwood?" He speculated, for an instant puzzled, then suddenly "Father-in-law," he cried. "Slivering snakes, he mustn't catch me like this—I, a business man!"

Hastily rolling down his shirt sleeves and shrugging himself into his coat, he made for the store, buttoning his collar and knotting his tie on the way.

He found Blinky nosing round the room, quite alone. Betty had disappeared, and the old scoundrel was having quite an enjoyable time poking in to matters that did not concern him and disapproving of them on general principles. So far as the improvements concerned old Sam Graham's fortunes, Blinky would concede no health in them. But with regard to Duncan there was another story to tell. Duncan apparently controlled money to some vague extent.

"You're Mr. Duncan, ain't you?" he asked, with his leer, moving down to meet Nat.

"Yes, sir. Mr. Lockwood, I believe?"

"That's me," Blinky chuckled, his hand in a genial clasp. "I'm glad to meet you."

"Thank you," said Duncan. "Something I can do for you, sir?"

"Want, Pere William was telling me you'd just took up this note of Graham's?"

"Not exactly. The firm took it up."

Blinky winked savagely at this. "The firm—what firm?"

"Graham & Duncan, sir. I've been taken into partnership."

"Have, eh?" Blinky granted mysteriously and fished in his pocket for some bills and silver. "What, here's some change comin' to the firm, then and here," he added, producing the document in question, "is Sam's note."

"Thank you," Duncan ceremoniously deposited both in the till, going behind the counter to do so, and then waited, expectant. Blinky was grinning busily in the key of one about to make an important communication.

"I'm glad you're a-comin' in here with Sam," he said at length, with an acid grimace that was meant to be a smile.

"Oh, it may be only temporary," Nat endeavored to assume a scrupulous expression and partially succeeded.

"I'm devoting much of my time to

"That's what I mean. D'you drink?" "Oh, no, sir," Duncan parroted glibly. "don't smoke, drink, swear, and on Sundays I go to church."

The bland smile with which he faced Lockwood's keen scrutiny disarmed suspicion.

"I'm glad to hear that," Blinky told him. "I'm at the head of the temperance movement here, and I hope you'll join us and set an example to our fast young men."

"I feel sure I could do that," said Duncan meekly.

Lockwood removed his hat, exposing the cranium of a baldheaded eagle, and fanned himself. "Warm today," he observed in an endeavor to be genial that all but sprained his temperament.

Indeed, so great was the strain that he winked violently.

Duncan observed this phenomenon with natural astonishment not unmixed with awe. "Yes, sir; very," he agreed, wondering what it might portend.

"I believe I'll have a glass of sody," "Certainly," Duncan, by now habituated to the formula of soda dispensing, promptly produced a bright and shining glass.

"I see you've been fixin' this place up some."

"Oh, yes," said Nat loftily. "We expect to have the best drug store in the state. What sirup would you prefer?"

"Just sody," stipulated Lockwood.

His spasmodic wink again smote Duncan's understanding of a mighty blow. Unable to believe his eyes, he hedged and stammered. Could it be?

This from the leader of the temperance movement in Ludville?

"I beg pardon?"

His denseness irritated Blinky slightly, with the result that the right side of his face again underwent an alarming convulsion. "I say," he explained carefully, "just—plain—sody."

"On the level?"

"What?" grunted Blinky, and blinked again.

A smile of comprehension irradiated Nat's features. "Pardon," he said. "I'm a little new to the business."

Blinky, fanning himself industriously, glared round the store while Duncan, turning his back, discreetly found and uncorked the whisky bottle. He poured out a liberal dose of raw red liquor. Then, with his fingers clamped tightly about the bottom of the glass,

"I say, just—plain—sody," he better to conceal its contents from any casual but inquisitive passerby, he quickly tilted it with soda and placed it before Blinky, accompanying the action with the sweetest of child-like smiles.

Lockwood, nodding his acknowledgments, lifted the glass to his lips. Duncan, awaited developments with some apprehension. To his relief, however, Blinky, after an experimental swallow, emptied the mixture expeditiously into his system and snatched his thin lips resoundingly.

"How," he demanded, "can any one want intoxicatin' likkers when they can get such a brain drink as that?"

"I pass," Nat breathed, limp with admiration of such astounding hypocrisy.

Blinky reluctantly pried a nickel loose from his chances and placed it on the counter. Duncan regarded it with disdain.

"Ten cents more, please," he suggested tactfully.

"What for?"

"Plain sody." The explanation was accompanied by a very passable imitation of Blinky's blink.

CHAPTER XIII.

HAPPILY for Duncan, Blinky had no sense of humor. If he had he would explode the very first time he indulged in introspection.

"Not much," said he, with his acid smile. "I guess you're jokin' about the price of that drink. Well, good luck to you, Mr. Duncan. I'd like to have you come round and see us some evenin'."

"Thank you very much, sir," Duncan accompanied Blinky to the door. "I've already had the pleasure of meeting your daughter, Mr. She's a charming girl."

"I'm real glad you think so," said Blinky. "Intensely gratified. She seems to've taken a great shine to you too. Come round and get acquainted with the hull family. You're the sort of young feller I'd like her to know."

He paused and looked Nat up and down captilously, as one might appraise the points of a horse of quality put up for sale. "Good day," said he, with the most significant of winks.

"Oh, that's all right," Nat hastened to reassure him. "I won't say a word about it."

Blinky, on the point of leaving, started to question this (to him) cryptic utterance, but luckily had the current of his thoughts diverted by the entrance of Roland, Barnette in company with his friend Mr. Burnham.

Roland's consternation at this unexpected encounter was, in the mildest term, extreme. At sight of his old player he pulled up as if slapped.

"Oh," he faltered, "I didn't know you was here, Mr."

"No," said Blinky, with keen relish: "I guess you didn't."

"I—ah—come over to see Sam about that note," stammered Roland.

"Want, don't you bother your head 'bout what ain't your business. Roly come on back to the bank."

"All right, Mr." Roland grasped frantically at the opportunity to emphasize his importance. "Excuse me, Mr. Lockwood, but I'd like to interduce you to a friend of mine, Mr. Burnham, from New York."

Amused, Burnham stepped into the breach. "How are you?" he said with the proper nuance of cordiality, offering his hand.

Lockwood shook it unemotionally. "How do do?" he said perfunctorily.

"I brought Mr. Burnham in to see Sam."

"Yes," Burnham interrupted Roland quickly; "Barnette's been kind enough to show me round town a bit."

"Here on business?" inquired Lockwood pointedly.

"No, not exactly," returned Burnham with practical ease; "just looking round."

"Only lookin', eh?" Blinky's countenance underwent one of its erratic quakes as he examined Burnham with his habitual intentness.

The New Yorker caught the wink and lost breath. "Ah—yes—that's all," he assented unhesitatingly. And as he spoke another wink dumfounded him.

"Why?" he asked, with a distinct loss of assurance. "Don't you believe it?"

"Don't see no reason why I should not," grunted Blinky. "Hope you'll like what you see. Good day."

"So long, Mr. Lockwood," returned Burnham uncertainly.

Lockwood paused outside the door. "Come 'long, Roland."

"Yes, sir; right away; just a minute." Roland was lingering unwillingly, detained by Burnham's imperative hand. "What d'you want? I got to hurry."

"What was he winking at me for?" demanded Burnham heatedly. "Have you?"

"Oh!" Roland laughed. "He wasn't winking. He can't help doing that. It's a twichin' he's got in his eye. That's why they call him Blinky."

"Oh, that was it," Burnham accepted the explanation with distinct relief, while Duncan, who had been an unregarded spectator, suddenly found cause to retire behind one of the show-cases on important business.

So that was the explanation! After his paroxysm had subsided and he felt able to control his facial muscles Duncan emerged suave and solemn. Roland had disappeared with Blinky, and Burnham was alone.

"Anything you wish, sir?" asked Nat.

"Only to see Mr. Graham."

"He's out just at present, but I think he'll be back in a moment or so. Will you wait? You'll find that comfortable, I think."

"Believe I will," said Burnham, with no air. He seated himself. "I can't wait long, though," he amended.

"Yes, sir. And if you'll excuse me"—Burnham's hand dismissed him with a tolerant wave. "Go right on about your business," he said, with supreme condescension.

And Duncan returned to his work in the back yard.

It wasn't long before he found occasion to go back to the store, and by that time old Sam was there in conversation with Burnham.

"That's part of my business," he heard Burnham say in his sleek, obsequious accents. "Sometimes I pick up an odd, no 'count contraption that makes me a lot of money, and more times I'm stung and lose on it. There might be something to this gas burner of yours, and again there mightn't. I've been thinking I might be willing to risk a few dollars on it if we could come to terms."

"Do you mean it really?" said old Sam eagerly.

"Not to invest in it, so to speak; I don't think its chances are strong enough for that. But if you'd care to sell the patent outright and aren't too particular we might make a dealer."

"What d'you say?"

"Why, yes," said Graham, quivering with anticipation. "Yes, indeed, if—"

"Well?"

"If you really think it's worth anything, sir."

Burnham laughed doubtfully and said:

"Well, as I say, there's no telling, but I was thinking about it at dinner, and I sort of concluded I'd like to own that burner, so I wrote out a little bill of sale, and I says to myself, says I: 'If Graham will take $500 for that patent I'll give him spot cash, right in his hand,' says I."

With this Burnham tipped back in his chair and brought forth a wallet from which he drew a sheet of paper and several bills.

"Five hundred dollars!" repeated Graham, thunder-struck by this munificence.

"Yes, sir, five hundred, cash. To tell you the truth—guess you don't know it—I heard at the bank that they didn't intend to extend the time on that note of yours, and I thought this five hundred would come in handy and kind of wanted to help you out. Now, what do you say?"

He flourished the bills under Graham's nose and waited, entirely at ease as to his answer.

"Well," said the old man, "it is kind of you, sir—very kind. Everybody's been good to me recently, or else I'm dreamin'."

"Then it's a bargain!"

Summer at Bay View.

The Bay View announcements are out and promise the tide of vacation people to that fair summer city, privileges and pleasures of the highest order. From a wilderness 35 years ago Bay View has become one of the largest watering places and summer educational centers in the West. In the past few years it is said there has been a large increase of young people. There is a reason for this. Bay View has not trusted in its wonderful climate alone, but has organized recreations; it has appealed to the best people, and has wisely kept living expenses down. There are three modern two and three dollar hotels, but by taking furnished room of which there are hundreds, and dining at the well supplied cottage dining rooms, one can cut living expenses to a dollar a day. Of course, the drawing magnets are the assembly, with its brilliant programs, and the highly organized summer university, opening July 17. In recent years the Bay View conferences have begun to attract wide notice. There are four: Bible, Missionary, Labor and Social and Good Health, each in charge of people of national reputation. J. M. Hall, Boston, boulevard, Detroit, is at the head of Bay View work, and on request will send the announcements.

NEVER AGAIN!

"Never again!" cries Guzzler.
"Never again for me!"
You bet I've signed the pledge for good.
Never! No, sir-ee!"
"Never again!" yells Grocer Tricks.
"Nix, nix, you bet!"
When I play that blame game again
The fools ain't all dead yet!"
"Never again!" moans Mrs. X.
"Never! Mercy me,
If I can catch another man
I'll treat him decently!"
"Never again!" sighs Sarah Ann.
A tear stands in her eye.
"Never, never, never!"
Her broken heart doth cry.
But what's all this fool talk about?
Why do these "Never" yell?
I guess I'll have to let you know,
For they will never tell.
Guzzler used a storage egg
To make a glass of nog,
And now he'll never, never,
Never again drink nog.
Tricks sold storage eggs for fresh.
He got ten years in jail.
"Never, never, never again!"
Is Tricks's bitter wail.
Mrs. X. made egg custard
With an old storage rot.
She now is rubbing at the tub.

TIMELY BREVITIES

Acid etching was first done in 1512. Moscow has 20,000 cabs and St. Petersburg probably the same number. A declining birth rate is a feature common to nearly all European countries. Fergus county, Mont., produces most of the sapphires mined in the United States. It costs Germany nearly $4,000,000 a year for the upkeep of her spies in France. New York has forty-three bridges, four of them being among the world's great bridges. More than 4,000 applications for patents are presented at the Russian patent office yearly. The Chinese government will hereafter print its own postage stamps instead of having the work done abroad. Scientists are demonstrating that nearly 50 per cent of our bodily life is caused by mental worries and hysteria. Walter Wellman, journalist and balloonist, established a weekly newspaper at Sutton, Neb., at the age of fourteen. Two separate pianos within a single case, the keyboards being at right angles to one another, is a musical novelty. The falls of the river Jordan below the lake of Galilee are to be harnessed to supply electricity to the large towns of Palestine. Having reduced beggary to a science an organized band of Jerusalem mendicants send out 50,000,000 piteous appeals for help a year. A German professor, Dr. Ohnefalsch-Rebber, believes that he has discovered the original Mount Olympus on the island of Cyprus. English jams and preserved fruits of many kinds are imported into the United States to the value of about $2,000,000 per annum. During the first four months of its existence the Turkish parliament failed to legislate a single law in connection with any public measure. In one plague-stricken town of China over 6,000 corpses have been or are being cremated, and the deaths have been occurring at the rate of 150 per day. Turin's international exposition will be opened April 29 by the king and queen of Italy in the presence of other members of the royal family and the government. The island of Margarita, off the north coast of and belonging to Venezuela, has a population of 60,000, who subsist principally by its pearl and other fisheries. British exhibitors at the Argentine exposition held in Buenos Aires received an excellent return for their trouble, placing orders aggregating no less than $14,599,000. There are now fewer than 200 women in the prisons of Holland, according to Dr. Simon von der Aa, who for fifty years has been the chief of administration of prisons in that country. Thousands of oil palm trees in Portuguese Guinea are said to be dropping their nuts annually. As there is nobody to take them away they rot, and thus valuable produce is lost. In the foothills of Mount Tacana, a Continental volcano, there is an almost inexhaustible supply of sulphur in huge blocks, which is taken out from time to time by Indians, but has not yet been exploited. Foreigners now have the same right to own real estate on the same terms as natives of the country in any part of the Ottoman empire except in the Hedjaz, a district in Arabia containing the sacred cities of Islam. One out of every twelve men in the United States army was brought before a court martial for some offense last year. Last year there were 5,206 trials by court martial in the army as against 5,580 the previous year. The demand for automobiles in Great Britain is constantly on the increase, and while the area of Great Britain is comparatively small, the number of motor cars in use is proportionately greater than in any other part of the world. The last great organized crusade for the prevention of disease in England prior to the present war against rats was in 1894-7, when, in order to stamp out hydrophobia, more than 70,000 stray, diseased and ownerless dogs were seized and unflinchingly put to death. The project for the canalization of the bar at the entrance of Lake Maracaibo, so as to permit the entrance of vessels up to twenty feet draft, is receiving considerable attention from the Venezuelan authorities. At present ships drawing over twelve feet cannot safely enter the lake. Haladjan Effendi, Turkey's minister of public works, declares that he is planning a national system of over 20,000 miles of the best highways, a great extension of railroads, irrigation and drainage works, river and harbor improvements, etc. Many thousands of miles of provincial roads will also be built, connecting the railroads and national pikes in a complete transport system. Princess Victoria Louise of Germany bids fair to be quite independent of the Kaiser's rules. Even at her early age she is said to take issue with her imperial father's edict that the three k's, kirche, kinder, kuche, should be the limitations of woman's activities, and she has taken the liberty of protesting against the Kaiser's anti-woman suffrage utterances. Recently the young princess visited a club of working girls and expressed herself as anxious to aid them.

Ordinance No. 103.

An Ordinance relative to the sales of articles of food and drink and other goods, wares and merchandise from stands, stalls, wagons, and other permanent structures located in the streets, avenues, alleys, parks and other public grounds and places in the City of Charlevoix.

Section 1. No person shall occupy any portion of any street, avenue, alley, park or other public ground or place in the City of Charlevoix with any stand, stall, booth, cart, wagon or any other stationary structure for the sale of any article of food or drink or other goods, wares and merchandise whatsoever except as hereinafter provided. Provided, however, that this Ordinance shall not be held to prohibit merchants from displaying their goods on the inside of the sidewalk adjacent to their places of business.

Section 2. Any person who desires to engage in the business of selling goods and articles from what is commonly known as a combination popcorn and peanut wagon, or in the business of selling other articles of goods, wares and merchandise, or both, on any public streets, avenues, alleys, parks or other public grounds and places in said City of Charlevoix shall first make application to the City Clerk for a license therefor, which application shall state the nature of the business to be carried on, and the place where it is proposed to carry on such business. He shall also present to, and file with said clerk the consent in writing, to his engaging in such business at said proposed location of the owner and occupant of the ground where the premises in which or at the side of where it is proposed to engage in the said business hereinafter mentioned and of the consent in writing of the owners and occupants of the ground where the said premises are located, and shall also pay to the City Clerk at the time of such application the sum of Twenty-five Dollars as a license fee. He shall also execute a bond with sufficient sureties to the satisfaction of the City of Charlevoix in the sum of Five Hundred Dollars, with the condition that said license shall pay all fines and penalties which may be imposed upon him for violation of any of the Ordinances of the City of Charlevoix while engaged in said business, and shall indemnify the City of Charlevoix against all loss or damage which it may sustain by reason of the granting of such license or such use of the said streets, avenues, alleys, parks or other public grounds and places. When the said applicant shall have complied with the foregoing provisions, the said City Clerk shall issue such license which shall be valid until the first Monday of the following June.

Section 3. Said license shall be revocable at the will of the Common Council of the said City of Charlevoix.

Section 4. No more than one license shall be granted to any one person or firm, and no license shall be granted to any person or firm who shall more than one stand, stall, booth, cart, wagon or other stationary structure maintained and operated under one license.

Section 5. Said stand, stall, booth, cart, wagon or other stationary structure shall be used and employed only for the sale of food and drink and other goods, wares and merchandise.

Section 6. Before leaving the location of said place of business at the close of each day, the licensee shall collect and remove therefrom all garbage, litter, paper or other refuse matter which has collected or been deposited in or around said place of business during the day.

Section 7. Any person who holds a license under this Ordinance shall in any case occupy the street or sidewalk in such manner as to interfere with or interrupt the travel upon such street or sidewalk, nor shall said licensee, cart, wagon, or other structure, blow any horn or whistle or ring any bell to call attention to the sale of his goods.

Section 8. Any person violating the provisions of this Ordinance shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof in a court of competent jurisdiction, be punishable by a fine not exceeding Fifty Dollars and costs of prosecution, or imprisonment in the City Jail or County Jail, not exceeding sixty days, or both such fine and imprisonment at the discretion of the court.

Section 9. All Ordinances or parts of Ordinances in conflict herewith are hereby repealed.

Section 10. This Ordinance shall take effect twenty days after its passage.

Passed and adopted the 24th day of June, 1911.

WILL E. HANSTON, Mayor.
ERNEST J. HILLER, City Clerk.

APPLY PROPER SCIENTIFIC METHODS

Advice Given by Chas. T. Manning of Manistee

TO WEST MICHIGAN FRUIT GROWERS

Nowhere in the United States are Such Opportunities Offered

Farmer or Orchardist Who Will Make a Reasonable Effort Will Win Out—Comparisons Made

Charles T. Manning of Manistee, who has been identified with the scientific agricultural and horticultural pursuits for nearly a quarter of a century, the best part of which period he has spent in great fruit sections of the western states, paints a glowing picture of the possibilities of western Michigan's unoccupied lands if proper scientific methods are only applied. He says as follows:

"I have been actively interested in the development of the fruit sections of the west of Oregon, Washington and Idaho, since 1888. I have seen the famous Yakima and Wenatchee Valley brought from sage bush hills and plains to their present state of highest and most prolific productivity. I have seen the flood river and Meador sections—only a very few years ago, generally covered with the yellow fir and sugar pine running from 150 to 300 thousand of marketable logs per acre—converted to what is now recognized as second to no fruit producing area in the world. I have seen southern Idaho brought from sage bush wastes, peopled only by the coyote, pack rabbit and the horned toad to some of the fairest lands of this great globe of ours.

"I have seen land values in all these districts at from $1.25 to $2.50 per acre gradually climb the ladder of appreciation until today none of these can be bought for less than $100 to $150 per acre for unimproved lands; $150 to $200 per acre for improved lands for alfalfa and general farming and from $500 to $3,000 per acre for bearing orchards, notwithstanding the handicap against the producer of 1,000 and 2,500 miles between him and his market.

"The wonderful development of the great western area was brought about through successive campaigns of consistent publicity by which the population was increased during the past 20 years more than four fold. This increase in population was brought in its greater part from the middle western states and Michigan has contributed an altogether too large a quota.

"A personal investigation of the conditions existing in the western counties of Michigan, extending over a period of four months just past has convinced me that nowhere in the United States are similar opportunities afforded to the man who desires to engage in any branch in agriculture and horticulture as in western Michigan.

"Evidence of the adaptability of the soil and satisfactory climatic conditions are manifest on every hand, and the farmer and orchardist who exerts even a reasonable proportion of modern energy and knowledge of 'how and why' in his care and cultivation of his lands and orchards, and marketing of his crops, finds remuneration equal to that enjoyed by his brother on his fancy priced lands of the west.

"So little is generally known of western Michigan and her possibilities. This lack of knowledge is not confined to the land hungry millions outside of this state, but may be said of the majority of the Michigan people outside that favored district, while even there, there seems to be an altogether a great dearth of the full realization of the wonderful possibilities yet lying dormant.

"Alfalfa has made more great fortunes in the western states than has her highly colored apples. Wherever alfalfa has been sown in western Michigan, good stands have been obtained and the fortunate grower has been able to cut his crop three or four times during the season, gathering an average of one and one-half tons of hay per acre per year. Equal to the best crops on the expensive irrigated lands of the west. Western Michigan soils are especially adapted to alfalfa. Alfalfa has added millions of dollars to the farmers' incomes in Kansas and Nebraska and has increased land values from 50 to 200 per cent. The sandy loam soils are its especial and particular environment.

"The members of the Western Development league are doing wonderfully effective work for that section of the state. They have compiled a book teeming in useful information and particularly authentic in their reckoning results obtained by farmers and orchardists. I have visited many of the growers mentioned in this book and find, without a single exception that the statements attributed to them are truthfully set forth. The following statements seem fully warranted by my investigations:

"Nearly all the fruits are successfully grown in nearly every county of western Michigan. Apples are universally successful. The extent of the peach belt is difficult to define, although it is generally adopted as a fact that this fruit will do better on an elevated location near to a body of water. Certain varieties of cherries are universally grown and with great success. Pears, plums and apricots do well wherever peaches are grown. The small fruit, such as strawberries, raspberries, blackberries, gooseberries and currants do well anywhere.

"In this booklet are given many instances of production of farms and orchards in this district; a few will enable your readers to form an idea of the possibilities of the fortunate owners of a farm or orchard in any of the counties along the shore of Lake Michigan.

"G. W. Haight has 141 acres in the Pleasant Valley Fruit farm, at which 80 acres are in fruit. He raises gooseberries that return over $700 per acre; currants $90 per acre; plums $250 per acre; cherries $300 to $1,000 per acre; Dutchess apples $700 per acre and winter apples at $300 per acre; prunes $200 to $300 per acre. There has not been a failure of the crop on his farm in 30 years.

"R. D. Graham in 1909 netted a profit of $2,800 from five acres of peaches and over $6,000 from 30 acres in general fruit.

"Curtis Flower sold 121 cases of gooseberries for $137.85, picked from a patch covering less than one-third of an acre. He sold 502 cases of cherries for $631, the product of 133 trees 25 of them small. This is a return of more than $500 per acre.

"Paul Rose is an expert on cherries—in growing, packing and selling them. He has one tree of the Schmidt Big earren variety which has produced 40 boxes of fancy fruit—ten pound boxes—and for which he received $1.50 per box. One acre of this variety yielding at this rate would produce over $5,000 worth of fruit.

"George Durand sold strawberries from a patch of one and one-half acres for $1,051.50 or at the rate of $705.00 per acre.

"These are only a very few of the results compiled for the bureau but they serve to show what can be done with orchards in western Michigan.

"The reports on crops raised on the farm are equally encouraging and include authentic evidence of most satisfactory returns of all grains, grasses as well as vegetables of all kinds. Western Michigan potatoes are in a class by themselves, and her canning and pickling establishments rank second to none.

"Neither farming nor orcharding is of the experimental nature in this district, for the counties embraced in the Western Development league include within their boundaries an area of 11,000 square miles, with 41,227 farms and an average of 206.165, an average of 50 acres of improved land for each farm.

"Yet in this same district is to be found over 5,000,000 acres not improved, land of the same character, in these same localities, of equal richness of soil, equal transportation facilities and equally adaptable for the highest form of development enjoyed by the older farming districts.

"These lands are found very largely in Manistee, Benzie, Grand Traverse, Wexford, Kalkaska, Mason and Lake counties, near to good towns, reached by one or more of the six trunk lines or of the various smaller lines of railroad with which the counties are gridironed. These are the lands formerly held by the great lumber companies, who, first, removed from their wealth of pine and cedar. A few years later the best of hardwood proved to be of more value than had the pine and full by the insurance companies, and now these lands have or, I represent, Myrtle Young.

are now being denuded of the last of their native wood and are thus made ready for their far greater wealth producing power under modern agricultural and horticultural development.

"Within the radius of 600 miles are found the greatest markets in the United States, Chicago, Milwaukee, Minneapolis and St. Paul, Detroit, Grand Rapids, Indianapolis, Cleveland, Cincinnati, St. Louis, Louisville, Columbus and Toledo are only a few of the great centers of population within this radius, and with a freight rate of 25 cents per barrel of apples from western Michigan to Chicago, as against 50 cents per box or $1.50 per barrel from Oregon, Washington and Idaho orchards, the difference in freight alone makes a very desirable and satisfactory profit.

"The development of these unoccupied lands of western Michigan means an added population of not less than one and one-half millions of people, to whom the products of Detroit's mills and factories should be sold to the exclusion of all competing in these lines. The people of this section are just awakening to the possibilities before them. I really expect to see such advancement made along these lines in western Michigan during the next few years as has been made in the northwest, the marvel of the present age. The natural advantages are there—People with energy, ability and stick-to-it-iveness and some capital are the requisites desired. These can only be interested by having presented to them the real conditions existing in this great area of non-productive lands."

TAX COMMISSION COMING

Will Order a Re-Assessment of Boyne City and South Arm

Possibly Other Towns in the County Will Be Boosted More or Less

The COURIER has it from headquarters, that the State Tax Commissioners will order a re-assessment of the township of South Arm, and of Boyne City. These towns failed to stand by the agreement entered into with Charlevoix last spring, and did not raise their valuation, while this city was raised nearly 40 per cent. There is no doubt but what, in justice to all concerned, the two towns named should have come up far more than this city, and we have an idea that when the tax commissioners get through with their re-assessment, the officials who went back on their word will wish they had stood by the agreement entered into with the representatives of this city.

We also understand that a re-assessment of several of the country towns will be asked for, as many of the rural supervisors failed to raise their valuations, even after the understanding at the special meeting of the supervisors, called for the express purpose of agreeing to a raise throughout the county.

The re-assessment of Boyne City and South Arm will be made some time during the summer and at the same time the value in this city will be looked into, but with the boost made by the assessor and sanctioned by the Board of Review this spring, we have no fear of any additional raise by the state.

RAISE IN SALARY

Uncle Sam Boosts Wages of Rural Carriers

Carriers on all rural routes throughout the state will get a raise of $100.00 a year on full routes, beginning with July 1, making their salary $1,000 a year. A full route is 21 miles or more. Carriers on routes of less than 21 miles get a proportionate salary and increase. On the rural routes out of this city there are two full routes and two slightly under 21 miles. Carriers Hanshaw and Van Lennep both receive over the stipulated 21 miles, while the routes of L. E. Smith and F. A. Butler come under this distance by a slight margin.

The raise was agreed upon in the house of representatives some weeks since, but the senate committee made an amendment giving the raise to offices of a certain class. The senate turned down the amendment and made it a flat raise in all the carriers.

TAKING TO ALFALFA

Great Increase in Crop in Western Michigan

Clubs Are Being Formed and Acreage Will Be Doubled This Season

Secretary John I. Gibson of the development bureau has returned from a thousand mile trip through the countries in the central part of the territory embraced in the bureau and reports that there is a great interest shown in the work of the development. The growing of alfalfa is becoming a topic of great interest, and it is a safe estimate that there will be double the amount grown in this part of the state this year than there was last. Clubs are being formed in the counties, the latest being the alfalfa club of Montcalm which has been organized with a good membership.

Farmers are convinced that the growing of alfalfa is one of the most profitable industries that can be engaged in by the farmers who have light soils on their farms, on account of the value of the forage and the great value that the crop has in enriching the soil. It stands the drought better than any crop that can be planted, and as several crops of hay can be harvested each season it is a very valuable farm asset. Another point in its favor is that it is a great soil builder, absorbing nitrogen from the air and depositing it in the soil when when other crops take the same element out in great quantities. When plowed under it makes the most valuable fertilizer that can be obtained.

The spirit of development has taken a firm hold upon the people of western Michigan and in the countries where the movement has been pushed with vigor there has been a great influx of settlers who will make permanent residents. In one of the counties south of here, eleven families have settled in one township, nine in another, and a like number in each of the other townships in the county. These people are all satisfied with the country and will make their homes on the lands they have purchased.

Local W. C. T. U. Members to Attend Meeting There

Members of the local W. C. T. U. are invited to meet with the Petoskey union, Friday, July 14, which is the date of our own meeting. Consequently the date of the Charlevoix W. C. T. U. meeting has been postponed until the following Tuesday, July 18. All members going to the Petoskey meeting will plan to go on the 1:00 p. m. train. Let all those planning to go notify the local president or recording secretary as early as June 12, as the Petoskey union wants to know how many to plan for from Charlevoix.

HAD A GOOD TIME

Local Odd Fellows Attend Banquet at Petoskey

Tuesday evening Charlevoix Odd Fellows in the number of about 25 attended a banquet at the Odd Fellows hall in Petoskey and from reports enjoyed the time of their lives. A goodly number from Harbor Springs, Elmira, and other neighboring towns, were present, and eight delegates from Elmira took three degrees. The degree work was enjoyed a great deal, and the banquet following the work of the evening was voted a great success.

CONSTRUCT NEW LINES

Michigan State Telephone Company Improves Service

Two of the Michigan State Telephone Company's officials, District Manager Clifford, of Petoskey, and State Foreman of Construction, Price Evans, of Detroit, were in this city on Wednesday of last week, and took up a tour of inspection to better determine the route for the proposed new toll line between Boyne City and Charlevoix. They inspected the route thoroughly by way of Horton's bay, where the company already has seven miles of poles set along the lake shore, and also the route by the way of East Jordan. It has not as yet been announced which route has been decided upon, but the actual work will begin on the new line, it is expected, in about two weeks.

This will be a much needed convenience to the telephone company, as the line between this city and Charlevoix has for a long time been overworked, and causes unavoidable delay in transmitting messages. With the completion of a new line this difficulty will be entirely overcome, and the service greatly facilitated.—Hayne City Journal.

The route decided upon is by way of East Jordan. When the much needed improvements have been made, the company will have three circuits to East Jordan, three to Boyne City, one to Ironton, and six to Petoskey. Another long distance line is now being placed between Traverse City and Grand Rapids, giving better service on the state lines. Manager Croner states that during the months of May and June he has installed 61 new phones.

ANNUAL SCHOOL MEETING

Will Be Held Monday Evening, July 10, at High School Building

Two New Members of the Board to be Elected

The annual school meeting of the public schools of Charlevoix will be held on the evening of July 10, at 7:30, at the McKinley building. At this meeting there will be elected a trustee to succeed Dr. R. B. Armstrong, whose term of office expires, and a trustee to succeed Olaf Nordrum, appointed to fill vacancy caused by death of H. L. Iddings. It is hoped there will be a large attendance of patrons of the schools at this meeting, as perhaps no more important public meeting is held than this.

Charlevoix public schools are fully abreast of the times and compare favorably with the best in the state, their high standard being recognized in all higher institutions of learning, and their graduates have made good in all walks of life, and have brought credit to this school. The past year has been a most successful one, and next Monday night, it is hoped, plans will be laid for a still more successful year.

CHARLEVOIX STATE SAVINGS BANK

Official Depository for the Postal Savings Funds

In view of the postal savings system which has been inaugurated in Charlevoix, the United States government has designated and approved of the Charlevoix State Savings bank, Charlevoix, Michigan, as an official depository for postal savings funds.

For the past three years since President Foley and Cashier Rachow have had charge of the management of the affairs of the bank it has enjoyed a steady even growth and given splendid and efficient service to its patrons. Much credit is due the officers of the bank in giving Charlevoix a financial institution of such a high standard. The bank pays four per cent interest on savings deposits, interest compounded semi-annually.

YOUNG BOY DROWNED

Lowell Pierce Fell Into the Creek at Boyne Falls

As the result of falling in the creek near Boyne Falls, Lowell Pierce, six-year-old son of Norman Pierce, is dead at his home from drowning. The little boy was watching cows and it is thought he stumbled down the bank of the stream and was unable to withstand the current, as his body was found at five o'clock Wednesday afternoon floating in the mill race. Physicians worked over him for an hour, but were unable to resuscitate him and were finally obliged to give him up.

Lowell Pierce was the youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. Pierce, there being an eight-year-old boy, Norman. The children are the nephews of Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Hankey of Petoskey.

BOARD SUPERVISORS FINISH THEIR WORK

Little Business of Importance was Transacted

J. H. GRAFF TO REPRESENT COUNTY

At the Meeting of the State Tax Commission

Much Time Spent in Auditing Bills—Valuation of County as Equalized by Committee

The board of supervisors completed their work just before the noon hour Friday.

No business of much importance was transacted during the session other than the apportionment of the county tax. Much time was spent in auditing bills from various places in the county, and getting them into shape for payment.

The committee appointed at the January session to look up the matter of establishing a tuberculosis hospital at the county farm, reported unfavorably to the movement.

J. H. Graff, supervisor from South Arm, was named to represent Charlevoix county before the state tax commission.

There was some contention on the equalization report, as several of the supervisors believed their respective townships had been assessed to high. Four reports were made, and one suppressed before the matter was settled.

Below we give the figures in detail, and the changes made:

PRESERVING FRUIT

Development Bureau Will Put Up Large Display for Fairs

The Western Michigan Development Bureau has begun the work of preparing its first display for the fall exhibitions, and it is expected to have a larger quantity and variety placed in jars than in former years.

A considerable number of the strawberries have been placed in the jars and now the work of preserving cherries is in progress, many fine specimens of the various varieties of the fruit have been secured. Some of the fruit samples of strawberries were found in this vicinity by Secretary Gibson on his recent trip through the county, and will be shipped to the bureau at Traverse City.

JUST PUBLISHED

Webster's NEW INTERNATIONAL Dictionary, (G. & C. Merriam Co., Springfield, Mass.) surpasses the old International as much as that book exceeded its predecessor. On the old foundation a new superstructure has been built. The reconstruction has been carried on through many years by a large force of trained workers, under the supervision of Dr. W. T. Harris, former United States Commissioner of Education, and reinforced by many eminent specialists. The definitions have been rearranged and amplified. The number of terms defined has been more than doubled. The etymology, synonyms, pronunciation, have received surpassing scholarly labor. The language of English literature for over seven centuries, the terminology of the arts and sciences, the everyday speech of street, shop, and household, are presented with fullness and clearness. In use of vocabulary, in richness of general information, and in convenience of consultation, the book sets a new mark in lexicography.

Measuring Hides

The ancient tanner paid an expert high wages to guess at the contents of his hides when sold by measure. Today an unskilled workman hands the irregular shaped pieces to a little machine that looks something like a table with a double top, which, quicker than the mind of the expert can guess it, reckons with exactness the square contents in both the metric and standard systems.

PERMANENCY IN ROAD CULVERTS

The Remedy For Worst Places In Highways.

THIS PROBLEM IS NEGLECTED.

Plain or Re-enforced Concrete is No Doubt the Best Material to Use For These Small Structures Either in the Flat Top or Arch Form, Says Kansas Highway Engineer.

Much as we need improved roads we need permanent culverts, more, says W. S. Gearhart, state highway engineer of Kansas. It is more important that all the bridges and culverts be in good condition than that all the roads be kept in first class repair, for if the road is to be used at all the culverts and bridges must be kept up. It is not often that a road gets so bad that it is impassable, but this is a common occurrence with culverts and bridges. The old ford is a thing of the past, and almost without exception the worst places in the road are at the culverts. They generally are from two inches to four inches above or below the road surface and often have a mudhole on either side and are in such wretched condition we would gladly drive around them if we could and often have to do so. And many of the stone and concrete culverts are only covered sufficiently to keep them in place. They are like a series of barrels half buried in the road, no attempt being made to build approaches to them.

Different state highway commissions have defined culverts as structures having spans of less than four feet to ten feet. In this discussion I assume that all structures under ten feet are culverts.

At the present time practically all culverts in Kansas are too small to carry the water that comes to them. The matter of the required area is one that has been given very little attention.

Good stone laid in cement mortar is very satisfactory either in arch or flat top construction for culverts. If stone is used a four-foot clear span would require that the flagstones should be twelve inches thick. Six feet is close to the safe maximum span for the flat top stone culvert. Many times stone abutments are built and a re-enforced concrete abutment on top, which gives a very satisfactory structure.

In the arch construction the base of the foundations should be sufficiently wide to resist overturning and be stable under any system of loads without any consideration for the earth fill.

Plain or re-enforced concrete is no doubt the best material to use for these small structures either in the flat top or arch form. The arch is sometimes objectionable in a flat country because it is found necessary in order to get a sufficient amount of waterway to make a raise in the road, which in many cases is very disagreeable. In the case of the flat top bridge the required waterway can be obtained by lengthening the span without making a hump in the road, which hump would in most cases result in a mudhole on either side of it. Where the foundations are not first class and there is danger of the structure settling the flat top is also to be preferred, as the forces are all vertical and the top is self-supporting. If the abutments do settle the top can be readily jacked up into place and adjusted while in the arch form there is very little that can be done to repair injury by settlement.

Why Sea Fish Die in Fresh Water.

By means of experiments carried on during the past summer at the biological laboratory of the United States Bureau of Fisheries at Woods Hole, Mass., U. G. Scott of the College of the City of New York and G. F. White of Richmond (Va.) college have determined that the gills of fishes are permeable to salts. The experiments consisted in making chemical analyses of the blood drawn from a salt water fish that had been placed in fresh water, the blood being sampled at intervals of from thirty to forty-five minutes. Not only does the blood of the fish become diluted through the absorption of fresh water through the gills, but there is an actual loss of salts from the body. These results are in harmony with those obtained by Dr. F. R. Sumner, director of the government laboratory at Woods Hole, five years ago and explain, at least in part, the death of salt water fish placed in fresh water, and vice versa.

Peat More Costly Than Coal.

There being no coal of consequence in Sweden, while it is well supplied with peat, it was thought that the substitution of the latter for fuel would result in great saving in the kingdom. The experiment was made on the Swedish railways, no fewer than 140 trial trips being made, with the result that the engineers estimated a loss of $1.51 per ton of peat as compared with coal, a ton of coal containing, it is said, as much heating power as 1.51 tons of prepared peat. The directors of the state railways have therefore discontinued the use of peat as a substitute for coal. They remark that many other countries have made similar experiments, and the same results have been obtained, thus causing a "red flag" to coal for steam purposes.—Consular Report.

Cost of the Pyramids.

To rebuild the pyramid of Cheops under modern conditions would cost about $100,000,000 and would represent the labor of 40,000 men for two years. It is said that the work really required the services of 100,000 men for thirty years. The pyramid occupies a space of twelve and three-fourths acres and is 750 feet high and contains about 13,315,000 cubic yards of stone and granite. The material alone represents an item of $30,000,000, while the labor would increase this amount by $70,000,000. To this must be added $5,000,000 for tools, transportation and similar items. The pyramid is built on a solid rock 150 feet deep, and to build a foundation of this character would add to the cost to the extent of making the total of $100,000,000.

Not His Nerves.

"Doctor," said the sick man, "I'm afraid my nerves are in bad condition."

"Oh, no," replied the physician, "that's not what is the matter with you. The fact that you have sent for me after ignoring the statements I've been sending you regularly during the past year and a half indicates that your nerves are all right."—Chicago Record Herald.

CHAPTER XIII Continued.
"Why, I hope I won't lose any money for you, Mr. Burnham," Sam

THE OLD MAN LIGHTED A CANDLE.

hesitated, with his incredulous sense of fulness and square dealing. "Making gas from crude oil ought to—" Duncan never heard the end of that speech. For some moments he had been listening intently, trying to recollect something. The name of Burnham plucked a string on the instrument of his memory. He knew he had heard it some place, some time in the past, but how or when or in respect to what he could not make up his mind. It had required Sam's reference to gas and crude oil to close the circuit. Then he remembered. Kellogg had mentioned a man by the name of Burnham who was "on the track of" an important invention for making gas from crude oil. This must be the man Burnham, the tracker, and poor old Graham must be the tricked. Without warning Duncan can round and made himself an uninvited third to the conference.

"Mr. Graham, one moment!" he began, excited. "Is this patent of yours on a process of making gas from crude oil?" Burnham looked up impatiently, frowning at the interruption, but Graham was all good humor.

"Why, yes," he started to explain; "it's that burner over there that—" "But I wouldn't sell it just yet if I were you," said Nat. "It may be worth a good deal." Burnham got to his feet in anger. "What business have you got butting into this?" he demanded, putting himself between Duncan and the inventor.

"Me?" Duncan queried simply. "Only just because I'm a business man. If you don't believe it ask Mr. Graham." "He's got a perfect right to advise me, Mr. Burnham," interposed Graham, rising.

Co." Nat's forefinger continued to do deadly work. Burnham backed away from it as from a fiery brand. "Oh, well," he said, dashed. "If you're representing Kellogg"—and Nat took care not to refute the implication—"I don't want to interfere. Only," he pursued at random in his discomfiture, "I can't see why he sent you here." "I'd be ashamed to tell you," Nat returned with an open smile. "Better ask him."

"I WAS THINKING ABOUT IT AT DINNER," for a final threat. "What's more I will do," he threatened. "And I'll do it the minute I can see him. You can bet on that, Mr. What's your name?" "No, I can't," said Nat, naively. "I'm not allowed to gamble."

This ingenuous expression exasperated Burnham. The man lost control of his temper at the same moment that he acknowledged to himself his defeat. In disgust he turned away. "Oh, there's no use talking to you!" "That's right," Nat agreed fairly. "But I'll see you again, Mr. Graham."

"Not alone, if I can help it, Mr. Burnham," Duncan amended sweetly. "But," Burnham continued, severely ignoring Nat and addressing himself squarely to Graham, "you take my tip and don't do any business with this fellow until you find out who he is." He flung himself out of the shop with a harked "Good day!"

"Well, Mr. Graham?" Duncan turned a little apprehensively to the inventor. "Margaret used to talk that way sometimes," he remarked. "She was the best woman in the world—and the wisest. She used to take care of me and protect me from my foolish impulses, just as you do, my boy."

For a space Duncan kept silent, respecting the old man's memories and a great deal humbled in spirit by the parallel Sam had drawn. Then, "I was afraid what I said would sound queer to you, sir," he ventured—"that you mightn't understand that I'm not here to do you out of your invention."

"There's nothing on earth, my boy,"—Graham's hand fell on Nat's arm—"that could make me think that. But $500, you see, would have repaid you for taking up that note, and—I could have bought Betty a new dress for the party. But I'm sure you've done what's best. You're a business man!"

New York would look into it for me. He was silent for a little.

"Who's Colonel Bohun?" he asked suddenly. "Why do you ask?" "I saw him this evening. He was passing the store and stopped to glare at me as if he hated it—stopped so long that I got nervous and asked Miss Lockwood (she'd just happened in for a parting glass of soda) whether he was an anarchist or a retired burglar. She told me his name, but was otherwise inhumanly reticent."

"For Josie?" I chuckled, but he didn't respond. So I took up the tale of the first family of Radville.

"The story runs," said I, "that the Bohuns were one of the P. P. V.'s, that they wicked of slavery, freed their slaves and moved north to settle in Radville. I believe they came from somewhere around Lynchburg, but that was a couple of generations ago. When the civil war broke out the old colonel up there—I gestured vaguely in the general direction of the Bohun mansion—"couldn't keep out of it, and naturally he couldn't fight with the north. He won his spurs under Lee. After the war had blown over he came home, to find that his only son had enlisted with the Radville company and disappeared at Gettysburg. It pretty nearly killed the old man, though he wasn't so old then, but there's fire in the Bohun blood, and his boy's action seemed to him nothing less than treason."

"And that's what sored him on the world?" "Not altogether. He had a daughter—Margaret. She was the most beautiful woman in the world. I suspect my voice broke a little just there, for there was a shade of respectful sympathy in the monosyllable with which he filled the pause. "He swore she should never marry a northerner, but she did. I guess, being a Bohun, she had to after having seen that must not. There were two of us that loved her, but she chose Sam Graham."

"Why," he said awkwardly, "I'm sorry." "I'm not. She was right if I couldn't see it that way. They ran away, and so did I. I went east, but they came back to Radville. Colonel Bohun never forgave them, but they were very busy till she died. Betty's not the kind that marries more than once."

We reached our gate, went in very quietly, lit our candles and with elaborate care avoided the homemade burglar alarm.

THE USEFUL DAIRY COW.

Contributes More to Man's Necessity Than Any Other Animal.

The dairy cow if able to express herself in a way which the human family would comprehend might well lay claim to being man's best friend, says the Kansas Farmer. She might establish such a claim by calling attention to the fact that from her product and from her carcass man manufactures more of the necessities of life than from any other animal source. She furnishes these necessities to him from infancy until such a time as temporal things are no longer associated with his existence, and she does it ungrudgingly and constantly. In addition to contributing to man's necessity and his pleasure, the pros-

The imported two-and-a-half-year-old Guernsey heifer, Rouge II, of the Trickleford 2855, owned by the Iowa State college, recently made a new world's record. In one year this great heifer has produced 6131 pounds of butter-fat and a milk yield of 10,000 pounds, an average test of 5.58 per cent. At 29 cents per pound the 6131 pounds of butter-fat would be worth $378.24, and at 25 cents per hundred-weight the 10,000 pounds of skim-milk would be worth $25.00, or a total of $393.24 worth of products.

erty of an agricultural community is more closely identified with her than with any other of the domestic animals. The horse is quite essential in tilling the soil, but where necessity requires in the sturdy son of the cow can take his place, as he has done in every agricultural section on earth. The horse can only furnish labor and can only return a profit to his owner when conditions are right for returning satisfactory grain crops. It is a well known fact that the dairy cow is the salvation of the farmer in times of poor crops, as she is able to convert the rough crops which are never a total failure into dairy products which always have a cash value.

In addition to this she furnishes skimmilk and butter for the calves, pigs and poultry and fertility for the soil, without which a farm becomes less prosperous. The elimination of the dairy cow would necessitate an almost revolutionary readjustment of man's tastes and requirements. It would mean untold suffering and hardship. Of course she will not be dispensed with, but her value can perhaps best be appreciated by contemplating such a loss.

She will continue to be man's best friend as long as the human family exists and will keep on supplying him with his greatest needs just as she has done through all the ages.

Cleaning Horses.
Clipping is not commonly practiced and may not be generally advisable. However, there are cases where it is justifiable. Many horses grow a long, heavy coat during the winter. When they are put to work the coat sheds itself, retaining the sweat and after the horse has stopped work may cause chills. Sometimes long, heavy hair will not dry out entirely all night. Clipping would prevent all the evils attendant upon long hair. However, it has dangers of its own. A horse suddenly relieved of his long coat is very sensitive to exposure and chilly breezes. If he is clipped the driver will have to be extremely careful to blanket well whenever the horse is stopped and to wrap the horse in a blanket if the weather turns cold. With a good, careful driver clipping may be safely done, and more satisfactory service will result.

Proper Horse Equipment.
Good, strong harnesses and durable farm implements increase the efficiency of the work horses. The horse that has a well fitted and properly adjusted harness can do more and better work than one that is compelled to wear a poorly fitted, dilapidated harness to amuse and irritate him every step he takes while at work. Strong and durable implements reduce breakage to a minimum and avoid delays required to make repairs during the busy season. Fly nets are necessary during the summer if the horses are to hold their flesh and the drivers their temper. They are not an expensive luxury and will last a long time if well cared for.

A Champ.
Evelyn, a just-nick-named horse, is a champion of the horse world. George, how's that? Evelyn, the makes like when he ought to play golf, and then he talks golf which he ought to make here—London Telegraph.

WHEN CARE SAVES PROFITS IN SHEEP.

When lambs are expected provide warm quarters for the ewes, deeply bedded with straw. Allow no one or any dog to frighten the sheep at any time now, for a sudden fright is likely to either cause premature birth or at least to have bad effects on both ewe and offspring, writes C. E. Davis in Farm and Fireside.

Go to the lambing house every hour until bedtime, and be ready to assist any ewe that needs it and to attend to the youngsters. If possible it is a good plan to sleep near the sheep yard and look in on them several times during the night. As soon as a lamb is dropped wrap the tiny bunch of bones in warm cloths until dry and well warmed, then unwrap and nestle it in the straw. The mother will do the rest. Within six hours see that it takes nourishment from the ewe. This takes patience and often some teaching, but it pays to persist.

As soon as the ewe has dropped the lamb or two give her a bucket of milk, warm water, for the act of lambing will leave her very thirsty. The drink will soothe her nerves, quiet her anxiety, and she will give down her milk freely and chew her cud contentedly. Cold water would be very hurtful, if not fatal, at this time.

When lambs are due separate such ewes from the rest of the flock to prevent injury and keep them in the fold where you can watch them every hour. It pays to let other things wait rather than be careless now and see all your year's profit fall and die. I have known sheep owners to turn pregnant ewes out in the pasture and lose three to five lambs that were born away out in the field, were chilled and died of neglect.

The splendid Cheviot ram shown above was a prize winner in the eastern circuit of fairs last fall. The Cheviots are a mountainous breed, hardy and do fairly well where pasture is scant. They have been successfully produced in New York, Pennsylvania, North Carolina, Indiana, Iowa and other states. The quality is of superior quality. The fleece of the ewes weighs six to eight pounds. This ram was bred by A. F. White of Steuben county, N. Y.

Always speak low and gently to the ewe at this time, for a sheep knows by your voice if you are angry or joyous, and it is the singing shepherd they love.

If you get the lamb safely over the first forty hours it is likely to grow all right after that, but warmth, care and attention must be there when needed. If there are born to one ewe, as I have had happen, you must raise one with milk and bottle or else get another ewe that has lost her own lamb to adopt the odd triplet.

Cost of Silage.

Professor A. L. Harker of the Nebraska station has worked out some interesting data on the cost of producing a ton of silage. Figuring in the rent of land, plowing, cost of seed, planting and cultivating, he found that it cost 72 cents per ton. The cost of filling the silo, allowing a liberal wage for man and team, he found to be 74 cents per ton. The cost of machinery and storage, including all items such as interest on money, interest, depreciation and repairs, and even taxes and insurance, was 18 cents per ton. Adding these three initial costs together, we find that the cost of producing a ton of corn silage to be $1.54. Professor John Rogers of Iowa has another way of figuring it in which he arrives at about the same figures.

Warning a Chilled Pig.

Of all the means of warming a chilled pig restoring his interest in things earthly probably there is nothing better than a vessel of water heated to about 95 or 98 degrees, in which his body and limbs can be submerged for ten to twenty minutes. In many instances it will well nigh revive the dead. If after this hot bath Mr. Pig is dried and placed where he can suck a well filled teat his outlook on the future will be much improved. —Colburn's "Swine in America."

Keep the Cow Clean.

A cow with a back that itches and lumps with chaff and dust cannot be so comfortable as one that's groomed every day. But that is not all. She will not digest feed so well as she would if her skin were nice and clean. When curbing for your cows do not neglect their tails. Clean these clear to the end. A clean brush is a beauty to a cow.

Dusty Hay Bad For Horses.

Don't feed dusty hay to horses. If you have no other kind sprinkle it with water just before feeding. Many horse troubles may be traced directly to dusty hay, and these are much more easily prevented than cured.

Little Coats.

They are not outdoor garments; they are merely little outer bodies on many of the empire models for evening gowns or negligees. The French call them evening coats. They are of silk or satin and are made with high waist lines and little pinnets. Some little coatlets fasten at the back. This gives an excellent opportunity for applying embroidery. Children's revers or head-work can be used on bodice and tail, and as a last suggestion the coat can be just as short as you please.

French Ivory Toilet Sets.

The toilet implements of the new French ivory, which is light in weight, are an improvement on the cumbersome silver paraphernalia that most women travel about with, as they do not get black and ugly if neglected for a week or two. Whipped off with a damp cloth is all that they need in the way of care. With a handsome monogram on each piece these white brushes and combs and boxes and trays are at once practical and ornamental.

WHITE SERGES ARE POPULAR AS EVER

Styles Are Simple and Braided the Chief Decoration.

For the spring-days and for cool summer hours there is something in the comfortable and stylish of a white serge dress. The new models are more attractive than ever. They are made quite simply and depend largely upon the fine quality of serge and upon a simple decoration of braid or patch embroidery.

The styles are many. The one piece dress is the most general and not with out just cause, for every woman who has enjoyed the ease and neatness of this kind of frock will insist upon a continuance of the comfortable style.

Braid is perhaps the dominant note of decoration on white serge dresses. While silk braid is used to outline collar and cuffs and deep cuffs and to form the banding.

The styles are many. The one piece dress is the most general and not with out just cause, for every woman who has enjoyed the ease and neatness of this kind of frock will insist upon a continuance of the comfortable style.

Braid is perhaps the dominant note of decoration on white serge dresses. While silk braid is used to outline collar and cuffs and deep cuffs and to form the banding.

White serge dresses for little ones or for grownups are popular. They are washed easily, they are good looking, and they are with great success. And they are more popular than ever.

Fashion Notes.

Stripes are prohibited as a coming thing.

Gold buttons are used on dresses, frocks.

Borders are seen on most of the cotton fabrics.

The high jacket is seen with and without a coat.

A very new veil is flesh pink, spotted with black.

The new trimming all things are striped, plaided, bordered, bordered, etc., and are lovely.

HUMOR OF THE DAY

The Biter Bit.

Who thinks to take another in to oft in his turn taken in.

Two townsmen and a countryman on a pilgrimage to Meen agreed to share provisions till they should reach Meen. But the townsmen ran short, so they had nothing left but a little flour enough to make a loaf. And the townsmen, seeing that said one to the other: "We have but little food, and our companion eats much. How shall we bring about that he shall eat none of the bread and that we alone eat it?" And they took this counsel—they would make the loaf and while it was baking should all go to sleep and who ever dreamed the most marvelous thing in that time should alone eat the bread. They did, thinking to be true the simple recipe, and they made the loaf and put it in to bake and they lay down to sleep. But the first saw through their treachery and when the companions were sleeping took the half baked bread, cut it and turned to sleep. Then one of the townsmen awoke as one dreaming and afraid and called to his companion, and the other said: "What hast thou?" "I saw a marvelous vision! Me thought two angels opened the gates of heaven and bore me before the face of God!" And his companion said: "Marvelous is that vision. But I dreamed that two angels seized me and, elevating the earth, bore me to hell!" The rustic heard all this and pretended to sleep, but the others called out to him to awake, and he discreetly, as one amazed, replied: "Who are ye that are calling me?" They replied: "We are thy companions!" And he said: "Have ye returned?" And they said: "Whence wouldst thou have us return?"

A Sad Case.

"She must have been delighted when her husband, whom she thought was killed in the railway wreck, showed up safe and well."

"I don't know about that."

"You certainly cannot doubt it."

"I only know she cried when she contemplated the order for the man that she had planned to buy with his insurance money."—Houston Post.

Gold and the Female Heart.

"It was Gray, wasn't it, who asked, 'What female heart can gold despise?'"

"I don't know. Maybe it was. But I can tell him any female can despise gold if it is necessary to do so in order to get a title."—Chicago Record Herald.

Made in Syria.

Seeing a man who had a blow on the head about to fall it up with salt and caraway seeds, his physician said to him: "Art thou going to send down thine head to the oven to be baked?"

A Startling Fact.

At a recent school examination a youthful scholar wrote this on his slate:

"Abraham Lincoln was born in Kentucky in 1812 at the age of seven years."—Hartford Weekly.

Queer.

Save Money in Flour

Bread properly made from high quality flour is the cheapest as well as the most nourishing food. Bread has earned the title, "The Staff of Life." A pound of Flour at a cost of 3c is more than equal in food value to three-fourths of a pound of the very best meat at a cost of not less than 15c. A pound of flour contains about one-eighth pound of protein, or tissue-building food, while a pound of beef contains but one-sixth pound of protein.

possible to shake Josie Lockwood's allegiance. I say grudgingly, because Roland didn't like the new partner and had said so from the first. But every one else did like him almost without exception. His attentiveness and courtesy were not ungrateful after the way things were thrown at you at Soborn & Lee's, we declared.
Duncan certainly did strive to please. No man ever worked harder in a bad ville store than he did. And from the time that he began to believe there would be some reward for his exertions, that the business was susceptible to being built up by the employment of progressive methods, he grew astonishingly capable of ideas, from our sleepy point of view. The window displays were changed almost daily, to begin with, and were made as interesting as possible. We learned to go blocks out of our way to find out what Graham & Duncan were exhibiting today. And oddity enough, sales were instituted on a regular basis of everyday use, such as shaving soap, toothbrushes and the like, being sold at a few cents above cost on certain days, which were announced in advance by means of hand lettered cards in the show windows, whereas, formerly we had always been obliged to pay full list prices.
Still earlier in his career as a business man he noted that the local practitioners wrote their prescriptions on odd scraps of paper.
"That's no way," he declared.
"Well, how to fix it?" And by next morning the beautiful, pressed leaf of the courthouse was being used in order from Graham & Duncan's and a few days later every physician, within several miles of Badville, received half a dozen of these "leaf" papers with his name and address printed at the top and the bottom, and the bottom, also, to preserve a permanent record of the names of the patients who used them. The names of the patients were printed in small type at the bottom of the leaf, and the physician was to fill in the name of the patient and the date of the prescription.

BETTY WAS WAITING ON THE SHOP their prescriptions and other orders in or have the physicians deliver them by the first post.

For he had a telephone installed within the first fortnight and the next day advertised in the Gazette that orders by telephone would receive prompt attention and be delivered without delay. Tracey Tanner became his delivery boy, deserting his father's stables for the obvious advantages of $1 a week with a chance to learn the business.

Starting with a line of five and ten cent packages of indigestible sweets, Duncan in time made arrangements with a big Pittsburg confectionery concern to ship him a small consignment of pound and half pound "fancy" boxes of chocolates and bonbons twice a week. And taffy pulls and fudge parties lined into desecrated.
Later Sperry introduced him to an association of druggists, of which he became a member, for the maintenance and exploitation of the cigar and tobacco trade in connection with the drug business.

Again, he treated Badville to its first circulating library, establishing a branch in the store. One could buy a book at a moderate price and either keep it or exchange it for a fee of a few cents.

Undoubtedly he made the business hum along these past few months and after that it settled down to a steady forward movement. The store became a social center, a place for people to meet. In time Tracey was promoted to be assistant and another boy engaged to make deliveries.

But this chronicle of progress has run away altogether with a desultory pen, which started to tell why Duncan didn't want to go to Josie Lockwood's party. I was long in finding out, but not so long as Duncan himself, perhaps, by which I mean to say that he was conscious of the desire not to go and determined not to without stop ping to analyze the cause of that desire more than very superficially.

It happened toward the close of the eventful day already detailed at such length, that as Duncan was entering the house with a load of boxed goods he heard voices in the store young voices, of which one was already too familiar to his ears. He paused, waiting for them to get through with their business and go, for he had no time to waste just then, even upon the helms of his manufactured destiny. Betty was then working in the shop, told Sam having gone upstairs for a little rest, who was overworked and weary with the excitement of that day, and it was Duncan's hope that she would be able to serve the customers without his assistance.

There were two of them, you see—Josie and Angie. Tuffin's—himself, as usual, in company. And while he waited, not meaning to eavesdrop, but unwilling to betray his whereabouts by moving, he heard very clearly their passage with Betty.

He overheard first, distinctly, Betty responding in expressiveness tones, "Hello, Angie. Hello, Josie."

These rushed what seemed a slightly awkward pause, then Josie, pain fully sweet, "Did you get the invitation, Betty?"

Betty moved into Duncan's range of vision, apparently intending to come and call on him. She turned at the ques tion and he saw her small, thin little body and pinched face on silhouette against the fading light beyond. He saw, too, that she was stiffening her self as if for some unusual contest.

"The invitation?" she questioned gently, but with her head up and steadily.

"Why," said Josie, "I sent you one to the party, you know, my lawn first next week."

I give the best recommendation as it is, "Did you?"

"I gave it to Tracey for you," persisted the tormenter. "Didn't you get it?"

Betty caught in her teeth indignantly. Only Duncan could see the little spasm of mortification and anger that shook her.

"Oh, perhaps I did," she said sweet ly. "I'll ask Mr. Duncan to wait on you."

She swung quickly on into the hall way, shutting the door behind her and so disappearing that she didn't de ceive Duncan's sharp-eyed nature. And if she had meant to tell him, she must have forgotten it, for an instant later he heard her stilling up the stairs, and as she stepped on he caught the echo of a suppressed sob.

He waited motionless, too surprised at the time to come to enter the store and endure Josie's varied advances.

"Hardly," he responded, touching a light to the wick and replacing the chimney. "It's a good deal of a job."

"Yes."

He replaced the lamp and in the act of turning toward another caught a glimpse of the girl's face, pale and drawn, her eyes a trifle reddened.

And with that common sense departed from him, leaving him wholly a prey to his impulse of pity. "Oh, thunder!" he told himself, thrusting a hand into his pocket. "I might as well be broke as the way I am now." He produced the scanty remains of his "extrastake."

"Miss Graham?"

"Yes?" she asked, wondering.

"Could you get a party dress for thirty-four dollars?"

"Thirty-four dollars?" she faltered.

He discovered what small change he had in his pocket. It was like him to be extravagant, even extreme. "And fifty-three cents?" he pursued, with a nervous laugh.

"Heavens!" the girl gasped. "I should think so!"

"Then go ahead!" He offered her the money, but she could only stare, incredulous. "I'll stake you."

"Oh, no, Mr. Duncan," she managed to say.

"Oh, yes!" He tried to catch one of the hands that involuntarily had risen toward her face in a gesture of wonder. "Please do," he begged, his tone persuasive, "it's a favor to me!"

But she eyed him, stopping back. "I couldn't take it; I couldn't really."

"Yes, you can. Just try it once and see how easy it is," he persisted, pursuing.

"No, I can't." She looked up shyly and shook her head, that smile of her mother's for the moment illumining her face almost with the radiance of beauty. "Don't! I thank you very much, just this same."

"But I want you to go to that party."

"You're awfully kind," she said softly, still smiling, "but I don't care to go now."

"Don't care to go? Why, you were hesitating on going a little while ago."

"Yes," she admitted simply. "I know I was. But I've been thinking over what you said, and I've made up my mind. I'll be out of place there."

"That of it?" he asked, thunder-struck.

"Yes. I've concluded I belong here in my own way of life."

She half turned away. "And I guess folks is better off if they stay where they be long."

WHO'S YOUR PRINTER

Are you getting a poor grade of Printing? If you are, is it because you go where the price is low that they cannot afford to hire competent mechanics?

If it is, you had better save your money, for the poor printed matter which you send out will do you more harm than good. It is true that a man is judged by his Stationery.

We pride ourselves on the high-class work we are turning out each day, and the esteem in which our Patrons hold us.

Polite Stationery and Writing Desk Supplies

Writing papers are a source of satisfaction or irritation to everyone who carries on correspondence. People of fine tastes show these refinements in their letter paper, and the color, texture, seal crest, or date or local name may all reflect this.

Are you just a little fastidious on this Point?

GOOD---Let us show you what we have in Linens and Bonds. You will be surprised at so much style for the price.

These things don't cost much; but look at the satisfaction and convenience they mean.

Courier Grange Column

Harmony Grange No. 1451.

Harmony Grange at its last regular meeting held one of the most successful meetings in its history. One application for membership was received. The secretary distributed the list of trade contrivances to all members.

Sister Ann Newville, in behalf of the Woman's work committee, presented the grange with a fine set of implements for use in initiatory work, and announced the next meeting to be held with Sister Mildred Leller in Boyne City. The program which was a varied one, was furnished by the winning side in the recent contest, after which the losing side furnished a supper more varied and more satisfying even than the program, altogether making an evening which those present will not soon forget.

The meeting was held at the home of Worthy Master J. A. Newville.

Ironton Grange No. 707.

Ironton Grange met in regular session Tuesday, June 27, 1911, with all officers present except Ceres, fifty members and one visitor being present. One application for membership was received.

After the regular order of business the grange was turned over to Flora. The program consisted of stories, recitations, songs and speeches. The lecturer then gave out the program for the next meeting.

For the good of the order the motion was made and carried that on Friday evening, July 14, 1911, they hold an open meeting. Committee for program were: J. W. Flanders, Mrs. John Nasson and the lecturer, Mrs. Jean Lewis. The Woman's work committee will serve ice cream and cake after the program. The grange then closed to meet again two weeks.

TIMELY HINTS FOR FARMERS

Sheep Easy to Handle.

Sheep cost the least to keep of any other farm live stock, do the most toward keeping the farm clear of foul weeds, tax the soil least that feeds them and improves it the most. Sheep are better contented when kept in confinement than other stock, are easily handled and are the most desirable animals for providing a good quality of meat for the warm months, and the money that results comes the easiest of any that finds its way to the farmer's pocketbook. Ten sheep can be kept where one cow can, and the risk is much less. It may be said that the sheep always carries her pocketbook with her. If she does her pelt of fleeces pays her funeral expenses. If she lives her wool in the spring and her lambs in the fall will pay double revenue.

Care of Hogs.

Don't make the mistake of allowing the young hogs to run with the gilt until they are three or four months old.

Feed a large variety of food, but avoid sudden changes—that is, do not change the whole ration at any one time.

To produce the full development of bone the work must be commenced before the animal is born, by feeding the dam plentifully with bone-producing foods while she is pregnant.

The development of the bone in a pig carries with it the development of the vital organs and a large increase in the amount of lean meat in the carcass.

Sowing Carrots.

It takes about two pounds to the acre. Cover seed not more than one inch deep and sow in drills ten to twelve inches apart if hand cultivated and twenty four inches apart if cultivated by horse. The plant is hardy and seed can be sown early, although late varieties for stock are sown in May or early June.

Record to Determine Worth.

Don't overstock your dairy in spring and keep a careful record of each individual from the day she takes a place in your herd. Her record will prove whether you keep her or sell her.

FEET OF THE HORSE NEED ATTENTION

Use the Rasp Freely on the Colts at Pasture.

The teeth and feet of the horse should receive special attention, for without these in a good healthy condition the animal's usefulness is in a large measure destroyed.

Many horses are so vicious or irritable that they will not allow any one to examine their feet, to say nothing of cleaning, trimming or shoeing them.

The colt at pasture should have its feet cared for as closely as the matured animal in order that he may grow to maturity with feet in a healthy condition. The foot of the colt grows so rapidly that the wall will often project far below the sole and cause it to split and form quarter and toe cracks. It is better to use a pair of hoof cutters and rasp and leave the foot pared evenly and avoid unbalancing the animal.

Any horse used on the road or street should be shod, but the shoes ought to be changed every five or six weeks and the feet trimmed in order that the natural growth of the wall may be removed. If the shoes are improperly allowed to remain on the feet for two, three or four months and in some cases a year without changing them the wall becomes excessively long and grows over the shoe. Pressure becomes too great on the sole and bars, resulting in corns, bruised soles and lameness.

A hoof hook should be included among the equipment of a well regulated stable. The foot of the horse should be cleaned every morning before he leaves the stable. The hoof hook will remove all litter, pebbles or anything that may have become lodged in the foot. This precaution may prevent injury to the sole or sensitive structures of the foot.

Better Silage For Sheep.

At the Minnesota experiment station it is believed that greater care must be had in preparing silage for sheep than for cattle. Sheep require a sweet and dry silage. Thickly planted corn cut before it is well matured does not make ideal silage for sheep.

Corn planted about like field corn, harvested and put into the silo when it begins to dent has proved very beneficial to sheep and they have done well on it. If clover hay is fed in conjunction with this silage cheap and satisfactory gains may be made in sheep fattening.

Growing Table Beets.

Table beets prefer a good, fertile soil that is well drained. Light soil produces early crops, although a clay loam will produce larger crops. Where possible plow the land in the fall. Beets are hardy and can be sown as early as the land can be worked.

Horse Notes.

Refrain the untrained horse rider a worried man.

About six months of age is the proper time to wear a strong foal.

Horse manure is much better to be mixed with other manure and worked over by sowing.

Provide a clean, dry bed and never allow a horse to lie on bare boards or stand in wet manure.

When the foal is taken away from the mare he should have a box stall that is well lighted and ventilated.

Sheep Worthy of Good Care.

The common opinion that sheep should be kept as scavengers and that they will thrive best on the farm that is too poor for other kinds of live stock is twin brother to the opinion that white beans thrive best on a poor, thin soil.

She Loved an Inventor

But She Did Not Feel That He Would Ever Succeed

By ESTHER VANDEVEER

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

It was absolutely necessary that I should marry. In these times many leads are open to women by which they can make a living, but then, well, teaching was about the only one. Girls went out as governesses, but instruction of any kind was not my forte. There was no reason why I should not marry, except that there was no one where I lived to marry—that is, no one but Tom Baxter—and, though he seemed to like me very well, he made no move matrimonially in my direction. He was always throwing out hints about people marrying who have nothing to live on. To tell the truth, I agreed with him. Besides, I saw no prospect of his ever being able to support a wife, for he was an inventor, and we all know what that means. An inventor ninety-nine cases in a hundred is a railroad chaser.

Tom lived in the village with his mother, but every now and then would go to the city "on business," he would say. It occurred to me that the business of applying for patents on machines that won't work practically or if they do some one else than the inventor gets what money there is in it is a very poor business. No, it would never do for me to rely on Tom. But I had come to be twenty years of age. Mother's income was not enough to take care of us all, and I must either find work or a husband. It nearly broke my heart to give up all hopes of Tom. He was a lovely sort of fellow, and his visionary disposition only made him more so. For some who are always living in the clouds and always hoping are strangely attractive.

My father, who was now dead, had been a great adviser in his day and

WILL JONES

TOM THREW HIS ARMS ABOUT MY NECK, had told me that if I ever wanted anything to let the fact be known through the press. He had never told me to advertise for a husband, and I had never dreamed of doing such a thing. But why not? The only objection to the plan was that I would doubtless receive replies from persons with unworthy motives. But I was not a fool to fall into a trap.

I wrote my advertisement, but I required a whole day to make up my mind to send it. However, in the evening I came to a decision and, taking it to the postoffice, mailed it.

I was especially relieved at getting few if any replies that indicated a trap. I attributed this to the wording of my advertisement. I was very careful to let it be understood that mine was a genuine case and that no one would be able to impose upon me. I received a number of answers, but there was only one that seemed worth my while to follow up. One letter came couched in the most respectful language and bore evidence of perfect sincerity. The writer said that he inherited, I was cut off from meeting members of the opposite sex since my advertisement said that I lived in a small village and the perfect English in which my advertisement was written marked me for an educated person. He sympathized with me deeply for finding it necessary to use such a businesslike method, but commended me for adopting it since there appeared to be no other at hand.

I replied to the letter—the only one I did reply to—in the spirit in which it was written, though I said very little, and that was simply suggesting a correspondence. I shrank from meeting any one under such circumstances, and never would meet any one without first being convinced that he was a true man. And even then he must convince me that he had written the letters I had received.

He replied, admitting no to proceed with the greatest caution and not on any account to trust either him or any one else without submission to a number of tests. He would be perfectly content to wait for my character to appear in my letters. He would prefer that I should appear thus rather than in the shape of a photograph. He feared that if he should find me very attractive looking he might be unduly prejudiced in my favor and if I lacked beauty he might not be impressed with my evidence of character.

I corresponded for a time thus with the man he gave me was Horace Allerton—but somehow we got up for her than a correspondence. Several months passed, and yet he expressed no desire to see me. His letters were eminently satisfactory, and I confess I felt a keen desire to see what he was like. So one day I wrote him that I would be pleased to receive his photograph.

He replied that he had been dreading to be thus called on for some time, inasmuch as he had no pretense whatever to manly beauty. Indeed, he considered himself homely. "But," he said, "I am making some negotiations which if successful will put me in much better condition to marry than now. They will be settled within a week one way or the other. If the issue is to my advantage I will be happy to call upon you. I hope by seeing you I may be able to do away with some of the prejudice that would occur from your seeing my picture unrelieved by any personal whatever."

It was about this time that Tom Baxter began to be more devoted to me than he had ever been. Of course there was no obligation on my part to my correspondent. That affair I sometimes thought was as much in the air as Tom's petitions. But Tom really seemed to have picked up the idea that he was about to realize something remarkable. Whether it was his confidence or my desire that he should succeed I don't know, but I found myself wishing he would. And if he were going to make a strike I wished that he would make it before my "lover on paper," as I considered him, should call upon me. My necessities grew greater every day. I felt it was due to my family that I should not only relieve mother of my support, but do something for them all besides. I feared that if Mr. Allerton should turn out to be a desirable party I might find myself inclined to treat him coolly, having Tom in my thoughts—in other words, by not encouraging the one available I might lose him.

But as bad luck would have it Mr. Allerton wrote he was ready to call upon me, and at the same time Tom became positively aggressive. He said nothing more about the folly of persons marrying without an assured income and began in a halting kind of way to really make love to me. I put him off, saying: "Don't be silly, Tom. You'll never be able to marry—that is, there's not more than one chance in ten thousand of your being so, for that's all the chance there is for an inventor."

He looked very downcast at this and said he believed that there was some one who had first choice, as he expressed it. I told him that I had not yet seen the man I would marry in preference to him.

"Oh, cheer up," he said. "My case isn't as bad as you think it is. I've just succeeded!"

I put my hands to my ears. I had heard the words "I have just succeeded" or "I am just going to succeed" so many times that I was not only tired of them, but, feeling toward Tom as I did, they were a mockery with me. He went away without a word, and I went to my room and cried.

The next day I wrote Mr. Allerton that I would be pleased to have him call upon me at the home of my cousin in the city, a girl about my age, who I knew would permit me to receive any friend of mine there. I supposed that day week for what I called a preliminary interview. There was no warmth in my letter, but how could I warm up for a man whom I had never seen?

I received a note by return mail stating that he would meet me on the date I had appointed. "And now," he added, "I am much pleased to tell you that fortune after many disappointments has favored me. I am an inventor!"

I threw the note on the floor. "For heaven's sake, are the only men in the world I have to choose from inventors?" Then, after waiting back and forth for awhile, I exclaimed aloud:

"If I must wait for an inventor I'll wait for Tom!"

The door opened, and who should come in but Tom himself. I blushed crimson, for I was sure he had heard me.

The expression on his face was a study. There was satisfaction and, above all, amusement. His eyes fairly sparkled with mischief. They turned from me to the letter on the floor. "Oho!" he exclaimed. "You have a lover!"

"Yes," I said fiercely, "and, like you, he is an inventor!"

He fairly shouted with laughter. Picking up the letter, he read it. Coming to where I had broken off, he went on with it: "I have just sold a patent right for $100,000 and a royalty on every article manufactured. The money has been paid me."

"By Jove!" he added. "The fellow has got ahead of me."

I stood stock still, red as a beet and not knowing what to do. Tom threw his arms about my neck. "I'm this fellow Allerton, and I've had the luck stated in his note. I saw your letter lying on a table addressed to the news paper. I wondered what it meant, subscribed for the paper, saw your ad, and surmised the advertisement was yours. I answered your advertisement and have enjoyed a correspondence with you amazingly."

"You ought to be ashamed of yourself," he said.

Tom and I are very happy. I have often blamed myself for not having had more confidence in his ultimate success in his inventions, or at least more patience in the matter. I rebuke myself of selfishness and a want of steadfastness toward him. When I say these things to my husband he says I was right, that there were a thousand chances to one that he was following an illusory fortune. How can I trust of him?

PEOPLE WE KNOW

They are Charlevoix People and What They Say is of Local Interest

When an incident like the following occurs right here at home, it is bound to carry weight with our readers. So many strange occurrences go the rounds of the press, are published as facts, people become skeptical. On one subject skeptics are rapidly disappearing.

This is due to the actual experience of our citizens, and their public utterance regarding them. The doubter must doubt no more in the face of such evidence as this.

The public statement of a reputable citizen living right at home, one whom you can see every day, leaves no ground for the skeptic to stand on.

MAPPING THE NATION.

United States Geological Survey Preparing Huge Atlas.

More than one-third of the area of the United States has been surveyed and mapped by topographers of the United States geological survey in connection with the preparation of a detailed topographic atlas of the country.

The maps represent areas called quadrangles and show by a system of contour lines all topographic features, giving elevations as determined by the survey's spirit level work. The quadrangles are areas limited by parallels of latitude and meridians of longitude and differ in size with the latitude of the area and with the scales of the maps.

The maps are of uniform size, but are engraved on three scales. The quadrangles mapped on the largest scale cover 15 minutes in latitude and in longitude, and the scale of the map is 1:25,000, or about one inch to the mile. The quadrangles mapped on the next largest scale cover 30 minutes in latitude and in longitude, the scale being 1:25,000, about one-half inch to a mile. The quadrangles mapped on the smallest scale cover one degree of latitude and longitude, the scale being 1:250,000, or about one-fourth inch to the mile.

Topographic work has been completed in Connecticut, Massachusetts, New Jersey, Rhode Island and the district of Columbia and will be finished in Maryland during the next field season. In only five states has less than one-tenth of the area been covered.

It is not yet possible to make an estimate of the number of sheets that will form the completed atlas, but it will probably exceed 8,000.

A GREAT INDUSTRY.

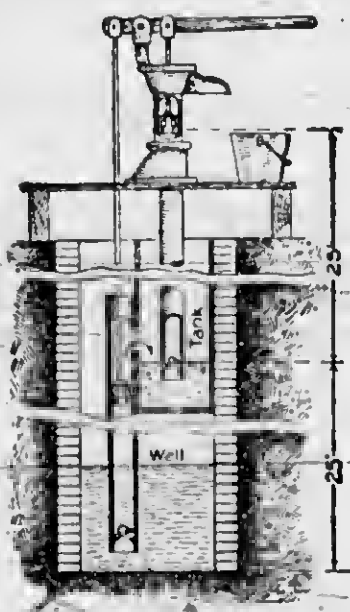

Portland Cement Ranks Third to Coal and Iron.

The growth of the Portland cement industry has not cooled, and its present relative importance is rapidly increasing. Its use in the construction of bridges, dams, and other large structures, which might well be termed the backbone of the present movement. We can no longer feel that the cement industry is small and unimportant, and that its condition is purely a matter of private or local interest. On the contrary, it must be realized that the soundness of the cement industry has now become a matter of interest not only to cement manufacturers, but to commercial and financial business generally. In rapid expansion it probably ranks third only to iron and coal among the American industrial industries. It certainly far outranks in this respect all the gold mining industry of the United States and Alaska. Even the paper industry falls into lower place, for the value of all the paper and pulp produced in the United States is only $140,000,000. From the banking point of view, therefore, we are dealing with one of the three great extractive industries of the world—Edwin E. Eckel in Engineering Magazine.

RAISES WATER FIFTY FEET.

Simple Device For Doubling the Lift of a Suction Pump.

It is well known that the height through which the ordinary suction pump will lift water is never much over thirty feet and indeed rarely exceeds twenty-five feet after some service, although the theoretical distance is nearly thirty-four feet. It is therefore somewhat of a novelty to find a suction pump having an effective lift of over fifty feet. Such a pump was described in a recent issue of the Practical Engineer. The explanation, however, is simple. Instead of using one suction barrel two are employed in this case, the piston rods, being attached to the piston of the pump on one side of the piston of the other. The pump to the left elevates the water from the well about twenty-five feet and discharges into a tank supplying the other pump, the water thus being relayed to the surface in two stages. It is obvious that the pumps must work at the same rate in order to obtain the best effect from the apparatus.

ARRANGEMENT OF THE PUMP.

Simple Way to Remove Rust.

A recent issue of the Brass Worker contained a simple method for removing rust from surfaces that were outward to be electroplated, but the method might be applied equally well to other rusty surfaces. It consists in dipping the articles first into a strong hot potash lye for about half an hour and then immersing in a cold dilute acid solution composed of two parts of water to one of acid. This removes the rust in a few minutes, leaving the metal apparently attacked but very little. The previous soaking in the strong hot potash solution is responsible for this rapid pickling, as a test proved, for without the previous dipping sixty-five minutes were required by the acid bath against four minutes when previously treated in the potash bath. Apparently a chemical reaction is set up, changing the character of the rust, softening it and making it readily soluble. The appearance of the rust as it comes from the potash kettle testifies to this, as it is black and soft and may almost be rubbed off with the hand. The pieces that have been treated in the potash bath have a smooth and glossy finish.

How Eels Breed.

Until within a few years not one could state with certainty how eels breed. For centuries naturalists have known a small, elongated, flattened, peduncled marine fish called leptocephali by reason of its curiously small head. In the latter part of the nineteenth century a leptocephali in an aquarium in France was observed to become gradually opaque and cylindrical until it turned into a little eel-like creature. A few years later it was demonstrated by Gissel that a species of leptocephali to be found near the strait of Messina was the long sought young of the fresh water eel.

Now, we are informed, eels when full grown make their way from ponds, ditches and streams into large rivers and from these to the sea, where they spawn at quite a depth. On the way to the ocean the skin of the eel becomes silvery, its eyes grow large and dark, and the left and right ovals develop in both sexes. The leptocephali grow to a length of about three inches and then ascend rivers in the form of eels or young eels.

Control Valve For Dye Vessels.

A new isothermal valve has been invented by Alfred Baldwin of Kellogg, England, and is now in operation whereby when the temperature of a thermometer placed in the dye vessel reaches any fixed point it completes an electrical circuit which by means of an electric magnet automatically shuts off the steam. By this means the range of temperature can be kept at 205 degrees to 210 degrees F. Since the employment of steam the temperature in a dye vessel has varied from 205 to 210 degrees on the side when the steam was admitted down to 202 degrees on the opposite side. This difference of 8 degrees possibly accounts for unevenness in dyeing. By this new control valve it is claimed that 95 per cent of the damage can be avoided, and there would be a saving in steam of 50 per cent in open vessels to 85 per cent in closed vessels.

The Dead Sea Rising.

The Dead Sea is encroaching upon the land about it so rapidly in this decade that whole forests of trees which formerly grew at some distance from its banks are now partially submerged. Maps of the sea made twenty years ago show an island near the northern extremity of the lake which was not found during a recent survey, and it is supposed that this has been lost in the rising waters. The Turkish government sold the mining rights on the shores to a syndicate for about $250,000, and if the sea for some unknown reason continues to rise these holdings will be almost unobtainable.

Relief Photography.

A new method of treating a photographic negative in order to produce the effect of stereoscopic relief in the picture has been invented by Messrs. Mandiane and Lallier in France. It depends upon the use of jets of light thrown upon the negative in the process of reproduction in such a way as to emphasize the lights and shadows. It is of special value for portraits. Lines of light and shadow are caused to surround the borders and salient points of the face and figure, thus giving to the portrait a realistic appearance of solidity like that obtained by viewing in a stereoscope two images of an object photographed from slightly different points of view. It is said that an ordinary negative may be employed to produce this effect, but the best results are obtained with negatives taken specially for the purpose.

Salted Railway Sleepers.

Railway sleepers used in south Russia are salted for preservation. The discovery of the efficacy of salt for the purpose was made accidentally some twenty-five years ago. The telegraph poles of Sebastopol soon rotted below the ground, and one of the staff tried the experiment of putting a pool of salt into the hole prepared for the reception of the base of a pole. The wood lasted five times as long as usual, and the experiment was repeated and extended to railway sleepers. Crude sea salt, such as is recovered along the Crimean coast, is used.

CHAPTER XVI Continued.

"I guarantee it, Tracey. Listen to me." And Duncan expounded Kellogg's rules at length, adapting them to Tracey's circumstances, of course, and throughout maintained the gravity of a graven image. "You try and see how I'm no right," he concluded.

"Gosh, I believe you are!" Tracey cried admiringly. "I'm just going to see how I works."

"Do, if you'd favor me, Tracey."

"Say, Miss—Nat, you've treated me something immense."

"Your mistake, Tracey. I haven't treated any one, since I've been here. I'm on the wagon."

"I mean just now, when we was talkin' 'bout me as 'Angle. I'd-I'd like to help you the same way if I could."

"You would?" Duncan eyed the boy apprehensively, wondering what was coming.

"Yes, indeedly, I would. An' p'rhaps I kin tell you something that will."

"Speak, I beg."

"You—er—you're tryin' to court Josie Lockwood, ain't you?"

"Oh!" said Nat. "So that was it! That's a secret, Tracey," he averred.

"All right. Only if you are she's your'n."

"Just how do you figure that out?"

"Oh, I kin tell. She was in here to-night with Roland."

"Tonight?"

"Yes, just afore you come home from prayer meetin'." She was lookin' for you, an' when she seen you wasn't here she wouldn't wait for no soda nor just missed seen her."

"Heavens, what a flow!"

"But Roland's talkin' her home needn't upset you none."

"Thank you for those kind words, Tracey." Nat sighed and passed a troubled hand across his brow. "You're a true friend."

"I'm tryin' to be, Nat, same's you are to me." Tracey thought this over. "But you ain't foolin' me, are you?" he asked, presently. "I mean 'bout bein' a true friend?"

"Why should I?"

"Ah, I dunno. You're so cur'us sometimes. I ain't never sure whether you mean what you're sayin' or not."

"Oh, don't say that."

"Well, I ain't the only one. Everybody in town says they don't understand you half the time."

Duncan moved over to Tracey. His face was entirely serious. "Tracey," he said, dropping a hand on the boy's shoulder, "do you know, nothing in life is harder to bear than not to be understood?"

Tracey wrestled with this for a moment, but it was beyond him.

"Then why the deekens don't you talk so's folks 'll know what it's about?" he demanded heatedly.

"Because—here!" Duncan hesitated with his enigmistic smile. "Well, he cause the rules don't require it."

"What'd you mean by that?" Tracey exploded.

Nat couldn't explain, so he countered neatly. "This is one of your Angle outages, isn't it, Tracey?"

"Yes, but—"

"Well, you hurry along. I'll close up the shop."

To Duncan, now seated on the edge of an upstairs box in a corner of the store, came an idea. He drew a roll of bills from his pocket and stripped off the top one.

"Here's $5," he said to Tracey. "Girls can usually be captured by judicious expenditures. I wish you luck."

"Ah, thanks, Mr. Duncan."

"But, Tracey—"

The boy paused at the door.

"What?"

"Remember what I told you. Don't you make too much love. Let Angle do that."

"Gosh, that'll be the hardest rule of all for me!" A shadow clouded Tracey's honest eyes. "But I got to do it that way, anyway. I can't ask her to marry me yet. I can't afford to get married."

"It's a contrary world, Tracey, a contrary world," sighed Nat in a tone of deepest melancholy.

"What makes you say that? You kin get married 's soon as you want to."

"You think so, Tracey?"

"All you got to do 's ask Josie—"

"I'm almost afraid you're right."

"Why? Don't you want to get married?"

"Well—Nat smiled—"no. Don't believe I do, not just now, at any rate."

"Well, you don't have to if you don't want to. G'd night."

"Yes, I do." Nat told Tracey's back. "The rules say so. If the girl asks me I must."

He grimaced ruefully beneath his wisp of a mustache. "Anyhow, I've got a few months left."

So the winter wore away, and as spring drew nigh upon our valley Duncan seemed to grow perturbed, even as he had been in the autumn before Betty went away.

Duncan urged Sam to move his household from over the store to a house. He pointed out that a separate residence distinctly belittled the dignity of a man who was at once a prominent inventor and one of the Badville Citizens, to say nothing of the social position of his daughter—meaning Betty. And the house Duncan had his metaphorical eye upon was large enough to shelter Nat himself in addition to the Graham family.

Graham fell in with the scheme without a murmur of dubiety or dissent. Whatever Nat proposed in Sam's understanding was right and feasible, and even if it wasn't really so Nat would make it so. They engaged the house and moved. Miss Ann Sophronis Whitmarsh, a maiden lady of forty-five or thereabouts, popularly known as "Phony," had been coming in by the day to "do for" old Sam in the rooms above the shop. She was engaged as resident housekeeper for the new establishment and entered upon her duties with all the discreet joy of one whose maternal instincts have been suppressed throughout her life. She, mothered Sam, and she mothered Nat, and she panted in expectation of the day when she would have Betty to mother.

CHAPTER XVIII.

JOSIE LOCKWOOD came home again for the Easter holidays, but she didn't return to finish her term in the New York school—just why we never discovered. The Lockwoods furnished us with a really satisfying explanation. They said that Josie didn't like New York, but I've always doubted that, especially since Josie married and insisted on moving straight away to that metropolis. I suspect she didn't get along with the class of young women with whom she was thrown at school, and I'm pretty certain she was uneasy about Nat all the time she was so far away from him.

It was during this period, between the Easter vacation and the end of the spring school term, that Roland Barrette's animosity toward Duncan became virulent. Josie, of course, was prompt to oust Angle Tutill from her place in the choir. After that she sang with Nat on Friday nights as well as Wednesdays and twice per Sunday. Between whiles she was a pretty constant patron of the store. There was no longer the least doubt in the collective mind of the town as to the intention of Josie's affections.

The culmination came the day before Betty was to return—a day late in May, I remember, and a Friday at that.

It began along toward evening. Duncan, alone in the store, was busy behind the prescription counter. Absorbed with his task, he thought himself quite alone until a well-kept voice reached his ear.

"Well!" it said, cautious with appreciation of the sight of him. "Did Dr. Duncan?"

He let the bottle fall from his hand and jumped as if he had been struck with a pin. His jaw dropped and his eyes bulged. "Front Street?" he cried and in a twinkling was round the counter, throwing himself into the arms of a man whom he hailed ecstatically. "Harry, by all that's wonderful!" He fairly danced with delight. "Henry Kellogg, Esquire," he cried.

$10,000 From 22 Acres of Michigan Fruit

The last issue of The Fruit Belt tells just how a Michigan grower reaped this harvest in the past "off year." "My Method of Growing Peaches" by Oscar W. Braman gives the complete story as told by the grower, with not a detail left out. The secrets of his success, the result of years of experience revealed to you for the price of a subscription.

$4,000 Crop of Apples off 7 Acres

In this issue Miss Grace Taylor of Michigan, tells you how she harvested a $4000 crop of apples off seven acres. She had 900 barrels of the finest apples off 225 trees, one tree yielding 14 barrels. And this too in an "off year."

You can get all this valuable experience and much more for the price of a subscription. Send today. One year 50c. Three years $1.00. The Charlevoix Courier and Fruit Belt $1.60.

ry." Kellogg waited a time for further particulars, but Duncan seemed stuck. "And you've made a strong play for the fond affections of Lockwood's daughter?"

"Certainly not!"

"You forget your rules." Nat grinned, whimsical. "I let her to make a play for me."

"Of course. My mistake. But how has it worked?"

"Oh, immense!" Duncan's tone, however, was wholly destitute of enthusiasm. He stuck his hands in his trousers pockets and half turned away from his friend, looking out of the window.

Kellogg smiled secretly. "You mess you've won her already? Then you're engaged?" Kellogg had understood perfectly, you see.

"No, not yet. I've got two months left—almost."

"So you have. And since she's so strong for you there's no hurry. Let her take her time."

"I only wish she would." Duncan removed one hand from the pocket that better to tug at his mustache. It's got beyond that—to the point where I have to keep dodging her."

"You don't mean it! That's splendid!" Kellogg got up and slapped Nat's shoulder heartily. "But don't overdo the dodging. She might get her back up."

"Not she. She'd eat out of my hand if I'd let her. You don't understand."

"What's the matter, then? Aren't you strong for her?"

"I wish I were."

"But why? Is there another?"

"No." Nat shook his head, honestly believing he was telling the truth. "Only I don't look at things the way I did once."

"Just what do you mean by that?"

Nat, squaring himself to face Kellogg, was very serious now and iron-bled. "See here, Harry," he said, "do you really want me to carry out the rest of the agreement?"

"Most certainly I do. Why not?"

"Because I'm pretty well fixed here. The business is making good, and so am I. It won't be long before I can pay you back, with interest, as we agreed, without having to marry that poor girl and draw on her money to make good to you."

"You want to go back on your agreement?" demanded Kellogg, with a show of disappointment and disgust.

"Yes and no. I won't break faith with you, if you insist, but I'd give a lot if you'd let me off—let me pay back what you advanced and cry quits."

When you outland this scheme I was down and three times out, willing to take a chance at anything, no matter how contemptible. Now—well, it's different."

"Good heavens! You don't mean you'd be willing to live here?"

Nat smiled, but not mirthfully. "I

Michigan Paying Fire Toll.

Michigan once more is paying a heavy toll to fire. Dry weather, fanned over several weeks, is responsible. The state fire warden's department seems to be doing the best it can under the circumstances but the forest flames are distributed over so wide an area that an army of men would be needed to cope with them properly.

While many tracts of timber are burning the fires are not all forest fires. In fact, the largest blaze, that which destroyed the twin towns of Oscoda and Au Sable at the mouth of the Au Sable River on the Lake Huron shore, started in a slash yard in Oscoda and fanned by the 30 mile wind quickly spread throughout the town, jumped the Au Sable river and consumed the work of destruction in Au Sable. The fire at Alpena started in logs on the bank of Thunder Bay river and spread to lumber yards and residences. At Cheboygan a great mound of sawdust, the careless accumulation of thirty years' sawing, had been burning a week and with wind fanned it into a blaze of menacing proportions. Railroad cars and a bridge were destroyed at Richardson, and an overhead bridge at Hartwood. Forest fires proper are raging in Charlevoix, Antrim and Oshtemo counties, on the Pleasant Lake section near Cadillac, and in various other parts of the state. In an old lumber company's holdings a fire started that is now eating up thousands of cords of wood piled up since the large timber had been taken out.

The point brought home by the widespread destruction is that Michigan, with its large tracts of standing hardwood, its extensive lumbering interests and its wide area of second growth timberlands, a state fire patrol service organized on a bigger scale than the present department. The losses recorded will amount to several million dollars, a fraction of which would pay for a larger service than in time of drought could do much to prevent fires from gaining headway in the dry timber. The prevention of fires in lumbering districts lies largely in the hands of the lumbermen. The fact that the accumulated sawdust of 30 years was allowed to stand at Cheboygan is an illustration of the recklessness that invites just such destruction.

The federal government long ago realized that only an adequate patrol service could save the government timber. The states have been slower to see the point, but they must recognize the necessity sooner or later.

Motion by Ald. Rachow and seconded by Ald. Nordrum that the names of the Council members be read and the matter of securing them or gas pipe posts for same be referred to the purchasing committee. Motion carried.

The following proposition of H. C. Nettleton for the purchase of the foot of Prospect St. was received at the meeting July 11, 1911 and placed on file.

To the Council of the City of Charlevoix:

Gentlemen: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 10th inst. and in reply to inform you that the City of Charlevoix has no objection to the purchase of the foot of Prospect St. for the sum of $2,000.00.

Secondly, if the title and possession of the block and adjacent thereto be given by January 1, 1912 with the above mentioned street and foot of street I will give the sum of $2,000.00. The city to establish the proper boundaries.

Under payment as follows: On first proposition, payment to be paid October 1, 1911, second proposition, $200.00, October 1, 1911, remainder one year thereafter, and security as follows: First lien of house and lot city, Charlevoix, first block of Prospect St. immediately 2 miles from city.

Respectfully Submitted,
H. C. NETTLETON.

There being no further business the Council adjourned.

To Clean Machine Belts.

Machine belts sometimes become so saturated with oil that they will not stay on the machines. Of all methods this is probably the simplest for cleaning the leather of oil and restoring its elasticity. Coll the belt in a tub of sufficient size so there is some space between the coils, then cover with whiting. The whiting should come in contact with the leather at every point on its surface, and if properly covered in this fashion the belt will soon be in good condition, for the whiting will absorb all the oil and restore the texture of the surface. Before being put back to use it should be wiped clean.

Robin Redbreast.

Mr. Louis Agassiz Fieries, comment on the habit of calling new birds by old home names regardless of specific differences, recalls the fact that the familiar name of "robin redbreast," first given to the European redbreast, is now borne by North America by a large redbreasted thrush. In the island of Jamaica by a tiny crimson throated kingfisher and in British Guiana by a ground dwelling which happens to present the suggestive coloring.

DEVICE WITH MANY USES.

Apparatus That Combines a Variety of Working Tools.

A French inventor named Seller has devised an apparatus which he calls the "Universal," because it constitutes a whole workshop in itself. Although it occupies little space and weighs only 132 pounds, it comprises a forge, an anvil, a boring machine, a vice, a work bench, a grindstone and a punch.

The steel anvil, which can be moved along the cast iron base of the machine.

MACHINE SET UP FOR BORING AND ANVIL AND FORGE.

China by turning a screw, forms one jaw of the vice. The other jaw is a fixed steel block attached to one end of the base and provided with a tool head and screw clamp for the attachment of drills and other tools. This end of the machine also carries a dust proof tool box and a grindstone. At the other end is the forge, which is simply an iron pan connected with a blower, placed under the grindstone. The forge can be removed when it is not needed. Power is furnished by a crank or hand wheel. The transverse slot is devised to give either a low speed for boring, etc., or a high speed for grinding.

Latest Goutier Theory.

Another medical problem possibly has been solved. The swelling of the thyroid gland, which lies in the front of the neck, commonly known as goiter, is known to originate in defunct bacteria and is also known to be associated with certain strains of the disease. For this there has never been a satisfactory solution.

The latest theory emanating from Dr. M. Wilcoz of the University of Basel is interesting. He holds that these goiter districts always were characterized by the same pathological conditions. The water here has been at some remote period in the world's history, never from granite or chalk deposits or from ancient lakes. Wilcoz' theory is that some soluble poison is generated by the decay of fossilized plants and animals of a remote geological age. This is borne out by the properties of the water, which is dangerous up to 75 degrees C. and altogether harmless when heated above 80 degrees C., which is a common attribute of organic poisons.

Solids in Human Breath.

It has hitherto been assumed by physiologists and hygienists that the exhalations from the lungs were composed entirely of oxygen, nitrogen, carbon dioxide, water vapor and other gases and vapors without any admixture of solid matter. According to a recent note in Cosmos, Dr. Cominda has examined with the ultramicroscope the moisture of the breath, condensed without contamination with atmospheric air and has found therein a multitude of solid particles of various shapes and sizes, some motionless, others moving and presenting the appearance of small globular bacteria and bacilli and like bacteria. Epithelial cells were also found. A few drops of this moisture evaporated to dryness on a glass plate left a dusty deposit nearly as dense as the deposit left by an equal quantity of potable water. No bacterial culture could be obtained, however, although four different culture mediums were tried.

Artificial Sponge.

Artificial sponge, as made by a German process, is chiefly a result of the action of zinc chloride on pure cellulose. The sticky viscous mass produced by this action is mixed with coarsely ground rock salt and then, in a press mold armed with pins, it is pressed with a multitude of little canals, imitating the pores of a natural sponge. After the necessary porosity is obtained the material is given a prolonged washing in dilute alcohol to remove the excess of salts. The artificial sponge has the same action as the natural in absorbing and retaining water.

Stairway of Carborundum.

A flight of stairs has been erected in Paris over which 14,000,000 persons have shuffled without so much as scratching the surface. These steps are almost as imperishable as if they were built of huge diamonds, for in the concrete of which they are constructed a generous proportion of carborundum has been introduced, and since carborundum is almost as hard as the diamond it has given the concrete a wearing quality which no marble or granite could possibly approach.

Crusty Crustacea Point.

Any woman who understands crusting can make pretty toes from yarns and worsteds. A gay looking ball that would give a baby or small child much pleasure is a straight piece of crocheting sewed to form a ring. Into this ring a rubber ball is slipped and the ends drawn up with baby ribbon. When soiled the "ball" can be washed and dried.

Rev. Welch, a former Presbyterian minister and now on the Chicago-Tribune editorial staff, will preach at the Methodist church Sunday at the usual hour.

Baker's Inn, now under the management of Sam Beaubien, reports a record business. Last Monday night the management roomed eleven people in other parts of the city near the hotel.

The barge Niko, passed up the lake to East Jordan, Friday, where she is loading lumber. This is the barge that saved a large number of people during the recent fire at Au Sable and Oscoda.

Mrs. Wm. Geer, formerly of this city but now located at Gloucester, Mass., who has been visiting here for some time, returned to her home Thursday. She was accompanied by Mrs. Amanda Moore and grand-son.

Last Friday Messrs. Richard Lewis, Henry Marshall, Will Ronger and Jacobs spent the day with Mrs. M. A. Babcock at Bay Shore. A sumptuous picnic dinner was enjoyed and a pleasant day spent.

H. N. Williams returned Thursday from his old home at Port Road, Ontario, where he spent the winter. Mr. Williams left Charlevoix last fall and visited various points in Canada and Ontario during his absence.

Mrs. Ada Thompson, Mrs. T. Hull and A. R. S. R. and C. L. Nowland of Wilson are enjoying a visit from their cousin, Mrs. Ward of Charlevoix and her brother James Nowland of Idaho, whom they have not seen for forty-eight years.

A quiet wedding occurred Tuesday evening at the residence of John Kopf in Hayes township. The occasion was the marriage of Mr. Kopf's daughter Anna to Mr. Walter D. Seibert, of Petoskey. Bohlen A. Putnam officiating.

The Woman's Missionary society of the Congregational church will meet next Friday afternoon, July 21 at three o'clock at the home of Mrs. John Nichols. Social settlement work and other philanthropic work in Chicago will be discussed. Responses to roll call will be from favorite passages of scripture. All ladies interested are invited.

Clare Heister, out on suspended sentence for violation of the local option law, was brought back from Traverse City Friday by Under-sheriff Novak. Heister has proved himself to be a bad man in general having during his parole, jumped bond bills, borrowed money from friends and failed to pay it back and will probably draw a severe sentence.

Frank Chamberlain of Charlevoix and Lucie Morf, also of Charlevoix, were married at the home of the bride's sister, Mrs. Roswell Williams Sunday morning at ten o'clock. Justice of the Peace W. H. Easton performed the ceremony. Mr. and Mrs. Chamberlain left Monday afternoon for Charlevoix where they will make their home—Central Lake beach.

Imagine the surprise of a Charlevoix housewife, Thursday noon, when about to try eggs for dinner, she broke the shell of one of the articles and found it cooked—hard-boiled. It was known that the bird was rather excessive, but that is carrying the things a little too far. It would seem as though a person would be allowed to cook an egg the way he wants it without having it come already prepared for him.

C. A. Morris, who is employed in the blacksmith shop recently purchased by J. S. Baker, met with a painful accident last Tuesday afternoon. He was shoeing a broncho, and while the horse was strapped down to prevent him from kicking, and other precautions being taken, the horse managed to rear up on his hind feet and kick Mr. Morris in the head, making an ugly wound in the nose and forehead. No bones were broken.

Mr. Clayton P. Eckhardt of Kalkaska and Miss Daisy D. Herrington of this city, were joined in sacred wedlock at the home of the bride, on Monday afternoon at 1:30 o'clock. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. F. Dewey-Ellis, pastor of the Baptist church, in the presence of a few immediate friends. Mr. Eckhardt is a prosperous young farmer of Kalkaska where they are to make their future home.

As she was playing circus at her home Thursday afternoon, Miss Phila Armstrong, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. R. B. Armstrong, fell from a high porch and dislocated her left arm at the elbow. The limb was given medical attention here, but in order that there would be no doubt as to its condition, the little girl, accompanied by her mother went to Petoskey Friday and an x-ray photograph was taken of the arm. Miss Armstrong had visited the circus at Petoskey and was endeavoring to have a performance of her own. She is doing nicely and we hope nothing serious will result from her unfortunate accident.

The Hennessee (Okla.) Clipper in an article headed, "How to Keep a Town from Improving," says: "In the first place, buy everything you need in some other place. If you have a flouring mill, send off for all your flour. It sounds better to have it come from a distance, even if the quality be inferior. If you have a brickyard, send off for your brick; it makes a man feel important to ship a few car loads of brick, no matter if he should have to pay more for them than he would at home factories." He suggests sending away for printing, and all groceries that can be bought in bulk, etc. All of which will prevent the home merchant from squandering money in building up their own town.—Escanaba Journal.

SHOT HIMSELF IN LEG

George O'Brien Meets With Peculiar Accident Sunday Night

George O'Brien, nightwatch at the Standard Cement & Lime Co.'s plant, met with a peculiar accident Sunday evening which may lay him up for some time. It seems that Mr. O'Brien kept a revolver at the plant and was out trying to shoot some squirrels which were running about the yard. He had taken several shots at a squirrel, when it jumped from the tree upon a small building. Mr. O'Brien crept up to the building carrying the gun by his side, and was trying to get a good shot, when in his excitement he pulled the trigger, the bullet striking him on the side of the right leg just below the knee. While at present the wound is not a bad one, it may prove to be a serious accident.

TWO GOOD BOOKS

The Tragedy of King Strang, Deals With the Beaver Island Murders

Two good books are promised by John C. Wright of Harbor Springs soon. One is called "Lay of the Lakes," and is now on the presses of Richard A. Badger of Boston, Mass. It will contain many original ballads and lyrics, the Indian tradition of the Happy Hunting Grounds, and a drama in three acts and 13 scenes entitled "The Tragedy of King Strang," giving an accurate historical picture of the stirring events of the Mormon occupation of Beaver Island. The other book is entitled "Ellis," a story of the White Slave Traffic, which should be read by every father and mother and boy and girl. Both of these volumes will be standard size, printed on a heavy wave paper and bound in ornamental cloth. Price one dollar each. "Ellis" is a northern Michigan girl and will interest everyone.

THEATRICAL

The Majestic theater was equipped with a new Powers' Improved No. 5 motion picture machine, last Friday by J. A. Rehkopf of Petoskey, who has been in charge of the theater for Mr. Cory during the past 10 days. The theater is booking acts through the International Theatrical Co. and is staging one double and one single act each evening, changing program twice a week with new pictures every evening.

Harold Spring of Elk Rapids will manage the theater this summer owing to Mr. Rehkopf leaving today for Chicago where he has accepted a position at one of the large houses in that city.

HELMIE APPOINTED

Adrian Man Gets Job in Food and Dairy Department

Dairy and Food Commissioner Dame has announced the appointment of James W. Helme of Adrian as deputy food and dairy commissioner, the appointment to take effect at once. Mr. Helme was formerly a member of the state senate and is generally allied with the Democratic party. He is editor of the Michigan Patron, the State Grange paper, and has been one of the zealous, vigorous figures in Michigan politics for many years.

Speaking of the appointment Commissioner Dame said:

"I suppose there will be remarks made because Mr. Helme is a Democrat, but he seems to me to be the man for the place. I wanted some one with a knowledge of dairying who can get out and talk dairy matters with the farmers and I believe Mr. Helme is just the man."

Mayor's Proclamation—Clean-Up Day

State Fire Marshall C. A. Palmer has designated Tuesday, July 25th, "Clean-up Day," and has asked every town and city in the state to make special efforts on that day to clean all refuse, rubbish and other material that increases the danger from fire. Following out this suggestion, notice is hereby given all good citizens to clean up their premises and abutting alleys and streets. The local fire marshal will be asked to inspect all premises and see that this requirement is followed. Let us all get busy and work together for a safer and a cleaner city.

WILL E. HAMPTON, Mayor.

don't know," he hesitated. "I'm afraid I'm beginning to like it."
"You, Nat?" Kellogg's amazement was unfeigned. "You ready to spend your life here slaving away in this wretched store?"
Duncan grinned indignantly. "Noh, on, now. Don't you call this a wretched store. There isn't a more complete drug store in the state!"
"Do you hear that?" Kellogg ap-

"OH, I KNOW HOW YOU FEEL, NAT," pealed vehemently to the universe at large. "Is it possible that this is Nat Duncan, the fellow who hated work so hard he couldn't earn a living? Gad, I believe I've arrived just in time!"
"In time for what?"
"To save you from yourself, old man. Here's the hellish you came here to cop out, ready and anxious, everything else coming your way, and—and you're more than half inclined to back out. You make me tired."

"I suppose I must. But I can't help it. I can't make you see how the thing looks to me. You know—I've written you all about everything—what this place has meant to me. Until I came here I never realized it was in me to make good at anything. But here I have. I'm doing so well that I'd actually have some self respect if I wasn't bound to play this low down trick on Josie Lockwood. I've worked and succeeded and been of some service to people who were worth it!"
"Who? Sam Graham?"
"He and his daughter!"
"Oh, his daughter?"
"Now, get that foolish idea out of your head! There's nothing in it. Betty's just a simple, sweet little girl who's had a pretty hard time and never a real chance in life—until I managed to give it to her. And I'd feel pretty good about that if— Oh, there's no use talking to you!"
"No, go on. You're very entertaining." Kellogg laughed mockingly.
"Well, I have tried to keep to the terms of our understanding. I singled out this Lockwood girl and worked all the degrees—didn't say much, you know—no lovelapping—just let her catch me looking sadly at her once in awhile!"
"That's the way to work it!"
"Yes, that's the way," Nat assented gloomily.
Kellogg laughed with delight. "Nat," he cried, "my poor crazy friend, listen to me. This working and church-going and helping old Graham is an very noble and fine, and I'm glad you've done it. This drug store is a monument to the business ability that I always knew was latent in you. And clean living hasn't done you any harm. But now you're due to come down to earth. This place pays you a neat profit. Well and good. That's all it'll ever do. It's new to you now, and you like the money, and you're having the time of your life dodging out you're good for something. But pretty soon it'll begin to stale on you, and before long you'll find yourself hating it and the town, and then you'll be back where you started. Now, I'm going to hold you to our bargain for your own sake. If you're stuck on the town and the work you can keep right on just as well after you're married, but when you do begin to tire of it you'll want that fortune to fall back on and do what you like with. Don't let this chance slip out on your life!"

"But," Nat argued feebly, "think of the injustice to the girl. From the way I've behaved since I struck this burg she thinks I'm closely related to the saluts."

"Very well, then; I'll concede a point. If you really think you're taking a mean advantage of her, which she proposes to you tell her all about yourself—just the sort of chap you've been. You needn't mention our agreement, however. Then if she wants to drop you I'll have nothing to say."

"Thank you for nothing," said Duncan bitterly. "A bargain's a bargain. I gave you my word of honor I'd go through with this thing, and I'll stick to it. But I tell you I don't like it."

"Oh, I know how you feel, Nat. But I know that some day you'll come to me and say, 'Harry, if you had let me back out I'd never have forgiven you.'"

"All right," said Nat impatiently. "I presume you know best."

CHAPTER XIX.
CUSTOMER came and went after Kellogg had gone up stairs to meet Sam Graham, and then Nat noticed that twilight was beginning to darken the store.

Tracy returned to look after the store during the supper hour, but was delighted to hear that he need not remain, but could go back to his beloved Angle.

Now Nat moved to the windows and switched on the bulbs behind the huge glass jars filled with tinted water. Returning, he was about to connect up the remainder of the illuminating system when Josie, entering, stayed him. Later he was glad of this.

"He knew that voice," "Why, Josie?" he examined in surprise, swiveling about to discover her standing on the threshold, very dainty and fetching—

TRACY WAS DELIGHTED.

Indeed, in one of the summery frocks she had brought back from New York. She moved over to him, holding out her hand. He took it with disguised reluctance.

"I'm so glad," she sighed. "I wanted to see you—to talk to you alone."

He bit his lip in his annoyance, shivering with a presentiment. "What about, Josie?"

"About Wednesday night, after prayer meeting. Why didn't you wait for me?"

"Why—ah—I had to get back to the store, you know. There were some checks to be made out and sent off, and I'd forgotten them. Besides," he added on inspiration, "you were talking with Roland, and I didn't want to interrupt you."

"So you left me to go home with him?"

"Why, what else?"

"You're making me awful unhappy." Her voice trembled. "You knew I didn't want to walk home with Roland."

"How could I know that?"

"I should think you ought to know it, Nat, unless you're blind. Besides, I told you once."

"True," he fenced desperately, "but that was a long time ago, and how could I be sure you hadn't changed your mind? Besides, you know, I mustn't monopolize you. If I do—"

"Well?"

"Why, if I do—ah—"

"If you're afraid people will talk about us, seeing us so much together, you needn't worry. They're doing that now."

"Why, Josie?"

"Yes, they are. We've been going together so long. And even now you don't seem glad to see me."

"You should know I am."

"You don't act like it."

"It's so unexpected," he muttered wretchedly.

"You didn't really think I wanted Roland Barnette to go home with me Wednesday night, did you, Nat?"

"It seemed so, but that's all right. Why shouldn't you?"

She turned to him, trembling a little. "Must I tell you, Nat?"

"Oh, no!" he cried in dismay. "Please don't!"

"I see I must," she persisted. "You're so blind. It's—"

"Josie, don't say anything you'll be sorry for," he entreated wildly.

"I can't help it; I've got to. It was—it was because I wanted to be with you. There!" she gasped, frightened by her own forwardness. "Now I've said it!"

Duncan grasped frantically at straws. "But you don't really mean it, Josie. You know you don't," he bellowed.

"You're just saying that because you have such a kind heart and—ah—don't want to hurt me—ah—because!"

"Nat," she said gently, looking up into his face, "would it make you happy to know I really mean it?"

"Why—ah—why shouldn't it, Josie?"

"Then please believe me when I say it."

"But I do believe it. I— He stammered and fell still.

"Because I do like you, Nat, very much, and—and it's very hard for me to know that folks think I'm pursuing you and that you're trying to avoid me."

"Josie," he exclaimed reproachfully. "Well, that's the way it looks," she affirmed plumbly. "You don't want it to do so?"

"Why, no, of course I don't."

"Then why don't you stop it?" She watched his face, her manner coy and yielding. "Nat," she said in a softer voice, "if you like me as well as I like you!"

He moved away a pace or two. "Ah, child," he said, with a feeling that the term was not misapplied somehow. "You don't know what you're saying!"

"Yes, I do," she pouted. "I don't believe you care anything about me."

"Oh, Josie, please!"

"Well, anyway you've never told me so." She turned an indignant shoulder to him.

"Why couldn't I?"

"But don't you see that I shouldn't, Josie?" He turned back to her side, looked down at her, pleaded his defense with the air of desperation.

"Just think, you are an only daughter—just what this had to do with the case was not plain even to him—'an only daughter,' he repeated—'ah, not only your father's only daughter, but your mother's only daughter. Your father—ah—is my friend. How unfair it would be to him to—"

But the girl interrupted with decision. "But papa wants you to. He told me so."

He could only pretend not to understand. "But consider, Josie. You are rich, an heiress. I'm a poor man. Would you like it to be said I was after your money?"

"No one would dare say such a thing," she asserted, with profound conviction.

"Oh, yes, they would! You don't know the world as I do. And for all you know they might be right. How do you know that?"

"Nat," a catch in her voice stopped him. "Don't say such horrid things! I could tell—a woman always can. I know you would be incapable of such a thing. Papa knows it too. No one has ever got ahead of papa, and he says you are a fine, steady, Christian man and he would rather see me your wife than any!"

"Josie!"

The interjection was so imperative that she was silenced. "Why, what, Nat?" she asked, rising.

"The time has come," he declared. "You must know the truth."

"Oh, Nat?"

"I'm not what you think me," he continued dramatically.

"Oh, Nat?"

"Nor what your father thinks me, nor what anybody else in this town thinks me. I'm not a regular Christian—it's all a bluff. I didn't know anything about a church till I came here. I smoke, and I drink, and I swear, and I gamble, and I only cut them all out in order to trick you into caring for me."

"Oh, Nat, I don't believe it!"

"Alas, Josie," he protested violently. "It's true, only too true!"

"But you did it to win my love, Nat?"

"Yes!" He saw suddenly that he had made a fatal mistake.

"Then, Nat, I will be your wife in spite of all."

WHO'S YOUR PRINTER

Are you getting a poor grade of Printing? If you are, is it because you go where the price is low that they cannot afford to hire competent mechanics?

If it is, you had better save your money, for the poor printed matter which you send out will do you more harm than good. It is true that a man is judged by his Stationery.

We pride ourselves on the high-class work we are turning out each day, and the esteem in which our Patrons hold us.

Polite Stationery and Writing Desk Supplies

Writing papers are a source of satisfaction or irritation to everyone who carries on correspondence. People of fine tastes show these refinements in their letter paper, and the color, texture, seal crest, or date or local name may all reflect this.

Are you just a little fastidious on this Point?

GOOD—Let us show you what we have in Linens and Bonds. You will be surprised at so much style for the price.

These things don't cost much; but look at the satisfaction and convenience they mean.

THOUSANDS ATTEND

Every Act a Feature, Making Show One of Best on Road

Robbin's Big Show Spoken of Highly at All Performances

After all, the one-ring circus is the place where one can have the greatest fun. You don't have to break your neck or strain your eyes to see everything that is going on with the result you don't go away with the feeling you have missed anything.

The thousands that attended the performances of the Frank A. Robbin's circus, which performed here for the edification of Charlevoix yesterday, left the big tent with the feeling that they had seen all the management had to offer and expressions of pleasure for the excellent show were heard on every side.

The Robbin's show while not as large as other shows that pay annual visits to this city is representative show and is all the word Circus implies.

One finds everything in a smaller degree the shows that delighted the grandfathers are at the old stand doing new business, the horses show greater cleverness than ever before, and the acrobats perform feats that send chills of dread up and down the spine.

Hilary Long, the greatest head artist in the world, bounded up and down a light of stairs like a rubber ball, doing all kinds of difficult feats with the strength of his neck and the hardness of his head.

The flying Glendales performed some of the greatest feats of skill and nerve ever before seen in a circus ring, leaping from trapeze to another and from end to end of the tent.

It would be hard to pick any particular feature.

Under feature. The company has called the show a "feature" and this is literally true. It is a feature circus and all acts are all well worth seeing at any time. The Robbin's show will always be welcome to Charlevoix. Camden, N. J., Courier, May 9, 1911.

CRUSADE AGAINST RATS.

Movement in Great Britain to Exterminate the Pests.

A public meeting was recently held in the Chamber of Commerce in London which had for its object the discussion of a plan for the extermination of rats and other vermin.

One of the speakers said it was estimated that there was one rat to every acre of ground in England and Wales and that the verminous loss caused by rats now amounts to $75,000,000 a year.

It was suggested that if rats were exterminated British importations of grain might be greatly reduced in value, even to the extent, it was remarked, of some millions of dollars annually.

In the last ten years 4,000 rats have been exterminated and destroyed in the port of London. At present the monthly destruction rates between 3,000 and 4,000.

There was also passed a resolution of the committee of the House of Commons, by which it was ordered that the United Kingdom from some foreign ports unless thorough measures were adopted for their extermination. In the last territorial extermination they were made last year in London it was found that only three rats were infected with plague, but in 1902 of 6,000 rats so examined in Glasgow not less than 124 were discovered to be so infected.

The scope of the resolution under an inquiry and the appointment of a royal commission was very broad, as it suggested the appointment of such commission to handle the matter.

(1) The houses of vermin and (2) the question of what measures are or are not to be taken to exterminate the vermin. The safety and efficiency of the various means of extermination and other means suggested for such destruction.

ASHES ON OCEAN LINERS.

Ejection of Furnace Waste a Problem on War Vessels.

Ejecting ashes from the holds of great vessels has come to be almost as great a problem as sailing. Since the ashes in the hold until the end of the trip would require more labor and time than the most costly coal could afford, and the old-fashioned method of hauling the ashes to the deck in buckets and throwing them over the side has long since been forgotten.

When marine engines were beginning to develop and the coal consumption increased the ash-hold was introduced and was regarded as a solution for the ash problem. But this also entailed much time and labor, and when much more powerful engines came into service the hydraulic ejector, by which the waste was blown through an aperture in the ship's side above the water line by water pressure, was adopted.

This system is still used by the merchant marine, but in the case of battleships it entailed cutting the waste pipe, which was expensive and also exposed vital openings in the vessel's side which might be covered or concealed by shells. A battle line was then evolved to crush the ash and then eject it through an opening in the ship's bottom by pneumatic pressure.

A great many battleships were equipped in this manner, but as they increased in size another problem presented itself. The ash had to be kept clear of the main condenser and the steam tubes, so in the latest pattern of the English battleship the ash is ejected below the water line, but above the life keel, by combined water and air pressure after the cylinders have been crushed.

NEW COTTON PICKER.

Machine Performs Better Work Than Human Labor.

Mechanics has at last been invented which appears to solve the problem of harvesting cotton by machinery. The cotton machine is so adjusted that it picks only the bolls that are ripe or fit for harvesting and leaves those which are not matured.

In one field a month, or more may elapse before all of the plants are ready for picking, and for this reason it is necessary to cover the ground at least twice by the machine, which operates so rapidly and is so efficient that the percentage of ripe cotton left after the machine has done its work is so small as to be insignificant as compared with the great waste which results from careless picking by the negroes.

The machine picks about ten pounds of seed cotton per minute, or 6,000 pounds per day of ten hours. On the first trip it gathers 75 per cent of the ripe cotton, and the remaining 10 per cent is picked on the second trip.

An average of thirty horsepower is required to operate this interesting cotton picker. A gasoline motor of thirty horsepower is usually installed for the service. Beneath the engine are what are termed two picking attachments swinging under it, and a pair of canvas bags hung out behind. It moves over the field as fast as a man walks, the wheels passing along the spaces be-between the rows of plants. The cotton is picked over by the revolving steel fingers, which catch the lint, but leave the plant unharmed, so that later bolls may mature. The plant machinery is on two drums which turn from the frame of the tractor.

An endless chain of upright cylinders of small diameter follow each other around the drums. From these cylinders the needles or spikes which do the picking project horizontally into the plant. In operation each plant has its individual movement. The drum carries the cylinders around; the cylinders force the needles into the plant at the proper angle to twist and catch the cotton.

Every bough is delicately adjusted. While the needles move fast enough to catch the cotton, their speed is not fast enough to throw it out of the picker. The cylinders bring on a needle the two places at the proper time, so that there is no waste of time or labor in reaching for an extra bough to pass through without better result of its contents. The drum is moving backward at the same rate that the whole machine moves forward, so that the picking needles do not move horizontally through the plant, but move vertically in it, the needles of each picker are so fast that they pick up the seed cotton which harvest the cotton. But one man is required to operate the machine, while he also steers the mechanism.

Meerschaum Getting Scarce.

The valuable material from which meerschaum pipes are made is continually getting scarcer, and the large industry which has flourished in Vienna, Budapest, Nuremberg, Paris and in the Thuringian town of Ruhla seems endangered. The manufacture of meerschaum pipes is much more important than is generally supposed. The town of Ruhla alone has been exporting in round figures, pipes to the value of about $1,000,000 annually. The finest grade of meerschaum is found near Esch-Schell, in Anatolia, Asia Minor.

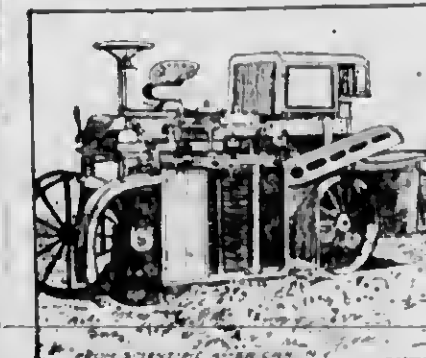

In a hollow which in early days was a lake in which the meerschaum was preplanted. Meerschaum is also found in other places, including Thebes, Egypt, the Bosnian mountains in the neighborhood of Grubitz and Nuen-dorf in Moravia and in some sections of Spain and Portugal. Consular Report.

How Clouds Get Their Fringes.

Typical used to explain to popular mind, with the aid of a brilliant experiment, that the blue color of the sky is owing to scattering of light by the dust particles which are the blue waves of light. This, as has recently been pointed out, occurs principally at a great elevation, where the atmosphere is extremely fine, while in the lower regions of the air, where the dust is coarser, the scattering affects all the rays, or colors, alike. The brilliant fringes of clouds seen nearly in the direction of the sun are largely due to dust, which especially accumulates in the neighborhood of clouds and reflects the sunlight around their edges.

Feeding the Calf.

It's a shame to keep the calf in a small place that smells so you can hardly endure it long enough to feed him. And talk about raising calves on bran water, hay tea, etc. If it's a case of "have to," all right, go ahead, but you can't raise as good calves on any substitute as you can on good milk direct from the cow. This is our way of raising fat, sleek calves.—Farm Journal.

Do You Want to Save Dollars?

If you do, you are the man I want to talk to. Part of the stock I recently purchased will be cashed out at cost and some of it will be sold regardless of cost price. I want to get rid of it and will make prices that are sure to move it. If you are after bargains and a chance to save some money, come in and talk the matter over with me and you will be dollars ahead. The stock is all new and is worth the prices formerly sold, but it must go. Note the following:

Lime-Sulphur Spraying Solution

250 Gallons at Manufacturer's Price. It will pay you to buy now if you don't use it until Spring.

Potato Crates

Both the folding and regular kinds, will close them out at less than cost price.

Paris Green at Cost Prices

Will sell quantity lots at just what it cost me, and small quantities less than you can buy it for elsewhere.

NOW IS THE PROPER TIME

To Renew Strawberry Beds for Next Season.

S. B. HARTMAN TELLS HIS METHOD

Interesting Article in the Michigan Farmer

It Properly Renewed Will Bear Better Than New Beds—Plants More Thrifty and Freer from Weeds

The strawberry season is drawing to a close, and as fast as we finish picking a patch we mow the vines, rake off the mulch and put it in shape to get ready for another season. The first patch renewed was a small plot grown for plants. Practically all of the plants had been taken up except the old plants which were left to renew the bed. These were about three feet apart in the row. We usually let these till in the rows and keep the plant patch for a fruiting patch another season, but this year our newly set propagated bed made such poor growth that we decided to work over the old bed for our plants next year. Accordingly we mowed it as soon as the best of the berries were off, raking off the mulch, using hand rakes to get it clean, ripped up the soil thoroughly between the rows with a five-tooth cultivator, and hoed out the rows. We did not use the plow as these rows were too narrow to use it to advantage, 30 inches, and we did not put on the spike tooth furrow as there were no more plants than we wished left, and we did not wish to tear any of them out. This patch has now been hoed twice, and the plants are growing nicely, and will be ahead of the spring set plants, I think.

We also have two of the fruiting beds renewed. The first operation in renewing these beds was to take the horse mower and mow the vines as closely as we could and still allow the mower guard to slip over the mulch. During the picking season the mulch gets trampled down so it lies flat and fully as low as the rows, so one can mow the rows over it with little trouble. The mulch used was marsh hay, and we have found that we can use this two seasons with fairly good results. The third season it is raked up and put around the young trees. I do not believe it is policy to burn this material for two reasons: First, it is too valuable as a mulch, and second there is too much danger of injuring the plants if the conditions are not just right. We tried burning for five years and have given it up. It is an easy way of getting rid of the mulch, but it is what might be called the lazy man's way. It is done at the expense of humus, just as was the plan of burning wheat or oats stubble or hauling out straw and burning before plowing. Its only advantages are that the ground works nicely after burning and perhaps it is more sanitary. Most of our beds are in young orchards, so burning would be out of the question anyway.

In raking the strawberry beds we use the horse rake, going over the rows twice lengthwise, then crossing to get any patches that may have lain to low between the rows for the rake to get when running lengthwise, also to get mulch between the trees when the bed is in an orchard. At this raking we also bunch up the winrows as best we can with the horse rake. If necessary we finish up any patches that may remain with a hand rake. It is essential to get the mulch off quite clean, so it will not bother in the later cultivations. When the rows are plowed and then harrowed down a little mulch will not bother as much as where they are cultivated out without plowing.

If the mulch is fresh last year it is stacked up near the patch and used another season. We then take the one horse plow and throw a furrow from the rows to the center, cutting about four inches deep, and running the landside quite close to the plants, leaving the unplowed strips from nine to twelve inches in width depending upon the manner in which the plants were layered. We do not intend to disturb any of the old plants, as these were originally layered and spaced and are located where we want them. I believe this is preferable to trying to plow under most of the old plant and make a new row from the side of the old one. In plowing the second furrow between the rows the first one is partially filled, so the latter furrow is the deeper than three feet wide. This is a convenience in hoeing out the rows, as the trash thrown up on the opposite side is drawn in about the plants, to facilitate the formation of new roots above the old ones.

The plow is followed by the spike-tooth harrow with the teeth set a little back of vertical. We go over the rows lengthwise first, which levels down the back furrows considerably, then crosswise, slanting the teeth back a little more if the ground is mellow. This stirs the soil in the rows between the plants taking out some of the weeds and saving time in hoeing. The harrow is followed by the garden rake. If there is much soil thrown on the plants, and enough is raked off them so that they will not be smothered out. The field is then cultivated after each heavy rain until October. As soon as the plants have started well, usually a week or two after harrowing it we can get to it by that time, we hoe out the rows. The plants are started enough by this time so one can locate them easily and hoe about them, cutting out the weeds and grass and drawing some fresh soil about them so the new roots will have a suitable ground to start in. If you have observed an old plant that has run down growth, you have noticed that the new roots which are supporting it are near the surface above the old ones.

If we have clean line manure available we give the ground a top dressing with the manure spreader, putting on the row attachment so as to spread it directly upon the rows. This is worked in by the evening cultivation and harrow. We find, however, to fertilize very thoroughly before the plants are set so it will not be necessary to use much fertilizer the second season, as there is usually trouble from the seeds contained in the manure.

I have thought all along that the best crop of strawberries would always be the year following the setting of the bed, but since we have discontinued the burning, and have worked out the old beds in this way we have found that they often give just as good results as the newly set beds, in fact one of our renewed beds has picked more berries to the acre this season than the new one, and the plants are more thrifty, and the patch more free from weeds than the bed set last year.

OUR CITIZENS WELL PLEASED

Frank A. Robbins' Show Gave Two Excellent Performances

On time as scheduled, the Frank A. Robbins' Show treated our citizens to two of the finest performances at Midtown, Tuesday of this week, that they have ever witnessed. All the features were first class and the many new acts were received by applause by the large audience both afternoon and evening. The street parade at 10:30 was fine and is one of the features of these shows that no one should miss. The menagerie is exceedingly interesting and instructive, and among the animals will be found one of the largest elephants and Jumbo, the giant camel, two of the animals in captivity. The music by the Royal Italian band during the performance and the concert in the evening before the show is a treat to lovers of good music.

The entire management is made up of perfect gentlemen and never before in the history of our town was there better behavior. The Robbins' shows will receive a welcome return at any future time. Junia Tribune.

Will exhibit in Charlevoix, Aug. 2.

Captured a Fawn

Franklin Chapel, son of Mr. and Mrs. F. N. Chapel, received a letter a few days ago from their cousin, who lives on Mr. Chapel's recently purchased farm at Woodville, Oregon, stating that he had captured a little fawn. The letter stated that he and a friend were out on the mountains back of the farm when the fawn and its mother appeared, chased by dogs, and the little fawn dropped, totally exhausted, a short distance from where they were. They took it home with them, and were taming it for Master Franklin. Mr. and Mrs. Chapel and Franklin will spend the winter on their farm located at Woodville.

COOLING MOTH PEST

Next Week is the Time to Spray Your Fruit Trees

Agricultural College Gives Formula for Fungicide That Will Prove Effective

This is the season of the year when fruit growers should pay strict attention to their trees in order that the codling moth which is abroad in great number can be checked and its larvae killed before injury is done to the apple crop. The moth is present in this vicinity and unless measures are taken at once to check its work great injury will be done to the orchards and the crop of fall and winter apples.

Fruit men have made a careful study of the insect and its habits and remedies have been found which, if applied in time, will stop its ravages and insure the safety of the trees. In order that all orchardists may know how to cope with this enemy of the trees Prof. H. J. Enslance of the agricultural college has sent out the following bulletin bearing upon the subject:

"Observations at the Michigan Agricultural College and several different places about the state indicate that the fall brood of codling moth is hatching at the present time, and without doubt laying eggs which will, in a few days, develop into larvae which is commonly called 'apple worm' and which is so destructive at this time of the year. This means that fall and winter varieties of apples should be sprayed the week, August 1, in order that the poison may be upon the fruit before the worms hatch and they will be sure to get a good dose as soon as they begin their work."

"From two and one-half to three pounds of arsenate of lead should be added to each 50 gallons of Bordeaux or dilute lime-sulphur of which ever fungicide is being used. Growers should be exceedingly careful to do a thorough job at this time if they expect to satisfactorily control the pest."

GUTTED BY FIRE

Bicycle and Repair Shop of H. T. Martin Badly Scorched

Thursday evening about 9:30, the bicycle and repair shop of H. T. Martin on Bridge street, just south of Baker's Inn, was discovered to be on fire and was badly gutted before the fire department could put out flames. The fire started back of the partition, between the two rooms and from there the flames rapidly spread to the roof. Considerable damage was done to the stock of bicycles, but the heaviest loss was on the tools owned by Mr. Martin and used in his general repair work. The building was owned by J. R. Cooper and was formerly occupied by Block Bros. meat market. No insurance was carried on the building or stock.

CHANGE IN SCHOOL LAWS

Truant Officers to Investigate Sanitary Condition in Schools

The last legislature amended the truancy act, so that the truant officer is now appointed by the county commissioner of schools and is subject to his orders, and among the other changes in the law is a provision that the truant officer shall investigate the condition of all out-buildings and instruct the school officers to put them in sanitary condition, and in case they fail to do so, the truant officer has the authority to have the work done and have the expense spread upon the roll of the district the same as other district taxes. This is a good provision, because some of the out-buildings about rural schools are very unsanitary and filthy, and there seems to be no way of getting at them, but the new law gives the necessary authority to the truant officer.

SEEKING CHOICE SPECIMENS

For First Michigan Land and Apple Show

Donations From Individual Contributors Will Be Graciously Received

Michigan grains as well as Michigan fruits will be shown at the first Michigan Land and Apple show to be held at the Coliseum in Grand Rapids the second week in November.

The management is already seeking choice specimens of wheat and other grains for display at this big exposition of the state's products and resources. It desires and requests that all farmers who have this year grown wheat, oats, barley, rye or other grains that are a credit to Michigan soil and Michigan methods of agriculture save samples and write to secretary John L. Gibson at the Land and Apple show headquarters, Evening Press building, Grand Rapids. The donations of individual contributions will be gratefully received and duly acknowledged. With the cooperation of the public spirited farmers of the state a display is certain that will advertise Michigan to the world in splendid fashion. Samples of alfalfa are also desired.

Secretary Gibson states that in handling the samples, the grain should be pulled up by the roots. If this is not practical, it should be cut to the roots as possible so as to show the entire length of the straw. The grain should then be hung up in the corn crib or some other place where it will be away from the vermin and birds. It would be better still to hang it up in the cellar where it would not dry out so quickly.

RECIPROCITY BILL PASSED

President Taft's Pet Measure Had Good Majority in Senate

President Taft's pet project, the Canadian reciprocity bill, went through the senate Saturday by a vote of 53 to 27. With the signature of the president it will become a law today.

Senator Townsend voted for the bill and Senator Smith against. Three Democrats and 21 Republicans voted against the bill. The McCumber amendment, up before the final vote on the bill, was defeated, also the Nelson, Simmons, Cummings and LaFollette amendments were defeated.

The amendments would place cotton baling, ties, agricultural implements, wood pulp, print paper, leather goods, lumber, salt, clothing, household articles and fruit on the free list.

LAW GOVERNING WEEDS

Is Very Stringent—Officers are Compelled to Act

Most be Cut Twice Each Year—Seed Sold Must be Free From Weed Seed

If you haven't already cut your weeds now is the time to get busy or the law will make you pay for your negligence.

The law governing weeds is very stringent, and a ruling is now a part of state law which makes it a misdemeanor for a dealer to sell grass seed in which milkweed seed is mixed. This ruling is even more strict than that which applies to Canada thistles.

At the instance of reality owners who are attempting to beautify their grounds, the law on noxious weeds has been looked up. There seems to be no law affecting individuals, but there are laws which compel officials and corporations to act.

Overseers of highways are expected to have noxious weeds in their district cut twice each summer, before June 1 and September 1.

Act 241 of 1890 applies the same rule to railroads.

Act 125 of 1893 compels all persons to keep their lands free of Canada thistles at all times.

The law on milkweeds is the same as on Canada thistles and even goes further, inasmuch as a dealer who sells grass seeds containing the seed of the milkweed may be prosecuted.

Act 241 of 1890 empowers villages to employ weed commissioners who can take all necessary steps for the cutting of weeds and prosecute people who do not cut weeds from their property under his instructions.

The boards of supervisors are empowered to make laws regulating the cutting of weeds.

The Soo News quotes a Soo business man as follows: "It seems to me that this matter of weed cutting is up to the individuals and not to the officials. A property owner ought really to have enough pride and regard for the appearance of his holdings as well as that of the city the weeds without waiting for some official to come along harvesting the crop. And I'll wager that these same property owners kick on the tax that efforts their land of noxious weeds and prevents the crop from seeding other adjacent property. It seems as though everyone should have pride enough not to want to see their vacant lots or other property covered with unsightly weeds."

GOOD RACE PROGRAM

Arranged for the Charlevoix County Fair

At the Meeting of Speed Committee Held Last Week

A meeting of the speed committee for the Charlevoix County Agricultural Society was held at the Russell House, Thursday afternoon to arrange the race program for the annual Charlevoix county fair to be held in East Jordan, September 12 to 16.

Purses aggregating $1,025 are offered on the schedule of speed events given below and should bring out the best array of racing talent ever seen in northern Michigan.

INTERMEDIATE FRUIT GROWERS

Association Will Meet Friday, July 28, in Forest Home Township

Program for the July meeting of the Intermediate Valley Fruit Growers' association, in charge of T. N. Chapin.

The July meeting will be held at the farm home of Charles F. Pinwell, in the township of Forest Home, July 28, 1911. In addition to the usual routine of dinner at 12 m. and general business the following subjects will be discussed:

Life History of Some of Our Injurious Insects—R. K. Morrow.

Labor Saving Machinery on the Farm—Grant Mudge.

Some advantages of Northern Michigan—C. L. Bailey.

Grape Culture—Thomas Guyer.

General discussion and music will follow each subject named.

Remember the enjoyable meeting held at the above place last year and come prepared to enjoy yourselves and make this a profitable meeting.

There are many things we ought to take up and consider at this and succeeding meetings outside the regular program. To become successful fruit growers and to guard the interests of fruit growing, needs the besting of the individual and the association about all of the time. Take every opportunity to counsel and advise with others engaged in the same occupation.

By order of committee.

FROM STORM OF SUNDAY NIGHT

Yacht Vencedor Total Wreck on North Point.

Shade and Fruit Trees Riddled, Windmills and Fruit Destroyed. Two Men Hurt at R. R. Bridge.

Sunday night Michigan suffered one of the worst storms in the history of the state, the storm center extending over the entire state, Charlevoix and vicinity, did not escape the damage done by the terrific wind being impossible to estimate at this writing. In the city, shade trees were riddled all over the city branches being blown off until the streets were filled with brush, telephone and telegraph wires were generally put out of commission. R. S. Shapton's windmill was blown down and he also lost several fruit trees. R. C. Squires and William Dougherty of the Marquette railroad bridge had a strenuous experience, narrowly escaping with their lives, the high wind causing them to lose control of the bridge and while trying to secure it Mr. Squires was knocked into the lake but was rescued by Mr. Dougherty after being severely bruised. Mr. Squires is now confined to the house. Finally the erection men were able to lock the bridge, but it again broke loose and Mr. Dougherty was also knocked off the bridge, badly bruising his shoulder.

In Marion township William Withers' windmill was blown down and Joe Guild's site was destroyed.

In all sections of the county fruit trees were blown down, limbs broken off, fruit stripped from the trees, corn broken down and growing crops generally laid flat to the ground.

From every portion of the lakes, come tidings of marine disasters. The Missouri, which was due at Charlevoix, made Northport and transferred the passengers for Charlevoix at Petoskey, where they took the Pere Marquette.

Saturday eleven yachts left Chicago on the annual Chicago-Mackinac race and were caught in the storm. One, the Vencedor, went in the rocks one-half mile below south point, the crew being rescued by the motor boat Arapahoe of Chicago and brought to this port. The Juanita which was disputing for the fifth place with the Vencedor put into this port and sent the life savers to the rescue. They arrived, however, after the Arapahoe had taken off the crew. An effort was made to pull the yacht from the reef with tugs but they were useless and she was pounded to pieces.

From all points on Lake Michigan reports are coming in of marine disasters and the storm will long be remembered.

Difference Between Mailable and Unmailable Postal Cards Explained

The following extract from an article in the United States Postal Guide explains what is mailable on a postal card.

"This does not include cards that do bear respectful requests for the settlement of current accounts, or that give notice when an account, paper, assessment, taxes, gas bills, etc., will be due, and such cards are regarded mailable. The provision of this section against matter of threatening character is held by the department to cover and make unmailable cards that threaten the bringing of suits or legal proceedings if debts, accounts, etc., are not paid. This does not include cards bearing rules of such order or society that failure to pay such assessment will cause the member to be suspended or that his certificate will become void, if the assessment referred to does not appear to be past due."

"IN A BAD WAY"

Many a Charlevoix Reader Will Feel Grateful for This Information

When your back gives out, becomes lame, aches or aches, when urinary troubles set in, your kidneys are in a bad way.

Doan's Kidney Pills will cure you.

It is a good experience to protect Mrs. L. A. Shack, 125 Grove St., Petoskey, Mich., says: "Some time ago I suffered intensely from backaches through my shoulders, limbs and across my kidneys. I had bought Doan's Kidney Pills and before I had used them long they disposed of my trouble, making it possible for me to sleep at night without suffering. I am pleased to say a good word for Doan's Kidney Pills."

The above statement was given in August 1910 and was confirmed by Mrs. Shack on July 20, 1911 when she said: "I can still recommend Doan's Kidney Pills as a remedy of great merit for kidney trouble and backaches. The relief they brought me has been permanent. You may continue to publish my testimonial."

Literary Notes

The Way to Treat Old Women.

In the August Woman's Home Companion, Margaret E. Sangster writes of youth and old age. Following is an extract:

"I hold firmly to the belief that few of us need to grow old unless we choose. Every decade has its advantages and pleasures, its dignities and privileges. We grow old only when we let ourselves rust. If we lose our sympathy with the young and cease to be interested in the current history of the globe, when a woman no longer needs to give her time and attention to her children, she should seize firmly upon another interest, and in her selection she should be guided by her own tendencies rather than by the wishes of her family. Nothing is more distasteful than detention to a woman who feels herself on a precise equality with those around her, but finds herself gently pushed in a direction which may not appeal to her. Mother would better not accept this invitation. 'Mother cannot think of going on a shopping excursion by herself. If friends are coming to dine with mother, Ellen or Nora or Melissa must be at home to be sure that no mistakes are made, that the dinner is perfectly served and the house precisely as it ought to be.' 'I could ever be left to myself for a single day,' a woman once said to me, 'I should feel myself in heaven, beforehand, but if it isn't Katherine, it's Maria, and if it isn't Maria, it's Gertrude, and if they are all going away, they arrange without consulting me, to have Cousin Mary or Aunt Sophia come for a casual visit, just as if I didn't see through the whole transparency. I shall run away some day and give them a chance to play hide-and-seek.'"

"The restlessness of girlhood is unlike the restlessness of later life, but for both there might be a cure in a little wholesome neglect on the part of anxious dear ones. To the assiduous and tenderly zealous young people who are unrelentingly in their waiting upon and offering relief to people who are frankly old and do not mind it, I recommend the thoughtful consideration of two aspects of the case. One is that experience counts for something as an asset, and the other that youth is steadily marching on toward old age, so it may be well for the young to mentally put themselves in the place of the old."

FUEL FROM WATER WEED.

Nile Sudd Converted into Satisfactory Coal Substitute.

As is well known, one of the great difficulties relative to navigation on the Nile is the obstruction caused by large masses of dense water weed or grass, generally known as sudd. For a distance of 200 miles the river runs through a very swampy country, and is unable to carry boats, square sails and known as the sudd district. A great drawback to this territory is the complete absence of fuel of any description, there being no timber, while coal has to be imported, and the price of these two commodities averages about $12 per ton. The existence of this weed offered a severe obstruction to the development of the sudd, since at this point the Nile could not be safely navigated owing to dense clumps of the grass, the fuel by floods, gales, and so forth, drifting into and blocking the river channel.

A German diplomat, however, conceived the idea that this grass must possess a certain calorific value, and suggested that it might be harvested and converted into a fuel very cheaply, so as to meet the local demand for fuel in this district. Lord Cromer and Sir Reginald Wingate were approached, and the assistance of the Sudanese government being secured, a small commission was dispatched to the sudd district to study the feasibility of the idea on the spot. Large quantities of the grass were secured and dispatched to Marseburg, in Germany, where experiments were made under conditions to determine how its use as a fuel might be effected, so as to get the maximum of the calorific value.

As a result a very simple and inexpensive process has been evolved. The sudd is first dried and then submitted to treatment in a disintegrator, which reduces it almost to the form of powder. This powder is then subjected to the manufacture into briquettes, which are only a few palates, and in the country tests their value carried out it was ascertained that the heating value of the disintegrated sudd is about 12 per cent that of coal, while the density of the briquette is 50 per cent of coal. The cost of manufacture was found to be so satisfactory as to enable the product to be manufactured on the spot in Egypt, to be sold for about 50 per cent of the local price of imported coal. Scientific American.

Sectional Maps Too. Sectional maps, showing different air routes or sections of the country, are also to be made, according to the Aero club's present plans. These will be placed on the strips of parchment and filed in boxes. The papers, in turn, will be filed in a permanent place in the club, just as a ship's compass is. As the air men pass over each part of the country, he will thus be enabled to identify it without making in his seat, merely by making the map. These sectional maps will represent as a whole ten miles with this map, an advantage for the traveler, but also of its course.

In making an air map for this country the Aero club is merely following the example which has already been set by the Aero Club de France. The French organization, with the assistance of the French war department, is preparing a very elaborate air map, which is to be used for the first time by the French military pilots in the maneuvers this summer.

All ordinary geographical landmarks which a man ought to know about will be put in. On the other hand, the air map will contain much information which geographical maps leave out and will leave out many facts which ordinary maps display prominently.

The height of mountains will be put in so that pilots may know the heights at which they are flying. People who travel on foot identify distant cities by the prominent shapes of their buildings. But to the air man who passes above them cities have no perpendicular dimension at all. They are perfectly flat, and he can only identify them by their horizontal contours. On the Aero club maps these horizontal contours will be described. The shapes of lakes will also be marked, because they are good marks for high flying air men.

Lights as Night Guides. At night air men can only tell where they are by the light of cities, and it is the plan of the Aero club to compile elaborate data as to these lights. Every city has some building or street which is lighted differently from the buildings or streets of any other city, and this fact will be noted.

The air maps already prepared in Germany show the different light-houses, and the Aero club's new map is to show them too. Germany has gone so far as to construct a series of "inland light-houses" for the guidance of night flying airships. The air maps of Germany are elaborate and have as many as fifty different signals or colors. The cities and towns have official numbers on the German air maps, and the various European countries have official letters. Each harbor or air harbor in Germany flies a number and letter showing what city and country it is in, thus enabling the traveling air man to fix his location.

MAN LORD AND MASTER. Massachusetts Judge Holds Wife Has Nothing to Say.

These precedents for the guidance of wives and husbands in cases of difference over household economy were laid down by Judge Charles L. Long in the separate support case brought by Mrs. Edith S. Marsh against Henry H. Marsh, assistant treasurer of the Five Cent Savings Bank of Springfield, Mass.

To begin with, the husband is absolute lord and master of the expenditure. Under the law, he is entitled to his meals at any hour he wants them. He may select such food as he chooses, if he wants one food and his wife another the husband's decision goes.

A servant girl to whom the husband objects must be discharged. Finally, man, who pays the bills, and not woman, is boss.

Mrs. Marsh did not indorse the court's opinions and said so.

A trip through the beet raising sections shows that beet culture not only improves the farms by the high state of cultivation required for a successful culture of beets, but the use of fertilizers which the beet grower uses also has an effect on the crop that follows. This year we particularly noticed the fields of oats which were on lands that grew beets last season. The straw was heavy and a good crop is promised as a result of the use of fertilizer on the beets last season.

A light dawned upon Nat, and laughter flooded his being, although outwardly he remained imperturbably and mildly curious. But his fingers were itching.

"So you think I'm the absurd, unattractive, cashier, eh, Betty?"

"You keep away from Josie 'r you'll find out what I think." Nat's playful, deceived Roland, who drew the whiffy, erroneous conclusion that he had succeeded in frightening his rival, and consequently dared a few lengths further in his trade. "Why, if I was to go to Mr. Lockwood and tell him you're Mortimer Henry, alias Nat Duncan?"

"That will do," Betty. "That will be all for this evening, thanks."

"Are you going to quit cashier after Josie?"

"I'll begin chasing after you if you don't clear out of here."

"You better run."

Just then the storm burst. Ten seconds later Roland, with a confused impression of having been kicked by a mule, picked himself up out of the dust in the middle of the street and stared stupidly back at the store.

"Here's your hat, Betty," called Nat, tossing him the hat. Nat turned contemptuously.

He paused in the middle of the store and left of his necktie. It proved to be a little out of place, but otherwise he was as immaculate as his own suit. He reviewed the encounter and laughed quietly.

"There's no cure for a fool," he mused.

The telephone bell roused him from his reverie. He went over to the instrument, sat down and put the receiver to his ear.

"Hello," he said. "Oh, hello, Josie! What's that? That's right, but I'm not used to it yet, you know. Well, I'll try again. Now—ready?"

He switched his voice to a key of heartrending sentiment. "Hello, darling! How's that? Told you father? Told him what? Oh, about the engagement? Was he angry? Oh, he wasn't, eh? What did he say? Wasn't that nice of him?"

Conscious of a slight noise in the store, he looked up. A young woman had just entered. She paused just inside the door, smiling at him a little timidly.

Without another word to his fiancée Nat put down the telephone and looked up the receiver.

"Betty," he cried, wonderingly.

CHAPTER XXI

BENEATH the trim of her dainty hat, with veil thrown back, Betty's dark hair waved back, glossy with the sheen of perfect well being, from a face serenely charming, the more so for her slightly deepened blush, and the eyes that shone into Nat's danced with the light of enjoyment, bred of his supreme astonishment.

Her father, who had left Kellogg and come in to get Nat's advice regarding some large orders received that day, greeted her warmly, gave her a parting kiss and retired.

"Nat, I'm so glad to see you again!"

"It's such a surprise, Betty."

"I knew it would be. I just couldn't wait, Nat, when I found I could get here by the night train instead of tomorrow morning. I haven't been home, you know, but I couldn't resist the temptation to stop in here and see what the store looked like after all these months. Besides, I thought that you or father." Her eyes fell and she faltered, withdrawing her hands.

"Why," he laughed, "you carry that my breath away. Listen now I can hardly believe it."

"I have what, Nat?" she asked quickly.

"That you're the same little Betty Graham. I never saw such a change."

"It's a change for the better, isn't it, Nat?" she asked, with a smile half wistful.

"I should think it was. It's just marvelous."

"I'll tell you so very awful, then?"

"Nonsense. You know you didn't only now."

"Then you think father will be pleased?"

"If he isn't I'm blind."

She looked away, embarrassed and touched by his interest and his feeling. "And does it make you a little proud, Nat?"

"Proud?" he exclaimed blankly.

"Because you know you've done it all. If there's any improvement in Betty Graham today it's because of you. If it hadn't been for you!"

She shook her head very decidedly, setting herself on one of the chairs by the soda fountain. "Why, Nat, don't

TODAY I BECAME ENGAGED TO JOSIE LOCKWOOD

you suppose I have any memory? she went on. "You began making me a better girl the very first day we met here in the store by the things you said to me. And ever since I've been watching you while you were making life a heaven for father and me and thinking that if I were a man I'd try to be as near like you as I could."

"Oh, don't say that!" he pleaded wretchedly.

"It's true. And when you sent me away to school I promised myself I'd try to repay you for the sacrifice you must be making for me; that I'd follow your example as nearly as ever I could; that I'd work hard and try to Nat, and considerately and bravely and tenderly and honestly."

He dropped into a chair, near her and buried his head in his hands. "Don't," he begged huskily. "Please, Betty, don't."

She bent forward and took one of his hands, patting it softly. "Nat, I think you're the very best man in the whole world."

"Don't!" he groaned. "Don't, for heaven's sake!"

"Oh, I know, Nat—I know you don't like me to say this, but I must, just the same, tell you the truth about myself. It's so splendid to live the life you do. You're all unconscious of it, but I want you to realize it and know that I do too. You've made everybody love you, and"

But confusion silenced her, and she gently replaced his hand. For several moments neither spoke. Then Nat broke the tension with a short, hard laugh.

"That's right," he said huskily; "that was the idea."

"Nat, what do you mean?"

He turned to her. "Betty, does it make you feel that way toward me?"

She colored divinely. "Why, Nat, of course. Why, every one!"

"That's why I came here, Betty," he pursued, blind to her embarrassment. "I came here with the idea of getting married."

He was staring gloomily at the floor and could not see the light that dawned upon the girl's face.

"You never guessed that, did you?"

"No," she breathed brokenly. "No, Nat, I—"

"Well, it's the truth, and"—He rose and moved away. "But I can't tell you just now—not now."

"No, not now—Nat?" Betty, too, got up. "I think I'd better go home, and see father. I mustn't forget"—She faltered, half blinded by the mist of the happiness before her eyes.

"No—wait!" She stopped to find his gaze full upon her. For the first time he comprehended that she had not understood—that, worst of all, she had misunderstood. "I must tell you," he blurted desperately. "I must."

Instinctively she moved a step toward him. He hung his head.

"Tonight, Betty—this evening, just a little while ago, I became engaged to Josie Lockwood."

She stood as if petrified throughout a wait that seemed to both interminable.

"Oh, Nat, dear," she said, "I'm so glad for you. I wish you all the happiness in the world. Good night."

The hand slipped out of Nat's. He did not move, but with a faint, white, his empty palm outstretched, and deep in his eyes and broken his heart, while she walked quietly from the store.

After some time he awoke to the knowledge that she was gone.

"Ridiculous fool!" he growled. "Why didn't I know I loved her like this? He took a turn to and the distracted thing—Good Lord, what can I do? I must do something or go mad!" He swung round to find the soda fountain counter and seized a bottle. "I know what! The roses, 're-oh! I can have a drink! I can have two drinks! I can have a million drinks if I want 'em!"

Pouring a generous dose of raw whisky into the glass, he lifted it to his lips and drew back his head. But the heavy bouquet of the flavor was stifling in his nostrils, and the first mouthful of it almost choked him. In a fury he flung the glass from him so that it crashed and splintered upon the floor. "Great heavens!" he cried, "I don't like the stuff any more! But—his gaze fell upon the clear case—I can have a smoke. That'll help some!"

With feverish haste he snatched a cigar from the nearest box, gnawed off one end and, thrusting the other into the mouth of a holder, pulled vigorously. But to his renovated palate the potent fumes of the tobacco were no less repugnant than the whisky had been. Half-strangled, he plucked the cigar from his mouth and stamped on it.

"Oh," he cried wildly, "I'll be damned!"

He paused, staring vacantly at nothing. "And even that doesn't do any good! Good help me, I've forgotten how to swear!"

To him in this overcast state came Tracy, lumbering cheerfully in, his mouth slanted for a whistle. At sight of Nat he pulled up as if hit by a club.

"Excuse, Mr. Duncan. What's the matter?"

By an effort Nat brought his gaze to bear upon the boy and comprehended his existence.

"Ain't you feelin' well, Mr. Duncan?"

"No—rotten!"

"What's the matter?"

"Nothing." Nat shouted ferociously.

"Anything I kin—"

"No!"

At that instant Kellogg appeared.

"Hello, Nat! What's been keeping you? I came down to bring you home to supper."

"Go to blazes with your supper! Keep away from me! Don't talk to me! I don't want anything to do with you, if you understand? And your confounded systems have got me into all this!"

He caught sight of his hat abruptly, ceased talking, grabbed the hat and

"HERE! HOLD ON! WHERE ARE YOU GOing?"

jammed it on his head, muttering, then started on a run for the door.

"That what's the matter?" demanded Kellogg, thunderstruck. "Here! Hold on! Where are you going?"

"To the only place I can get any consolation. I'm going to church!"

CONFESSED AFTER DREAM.

Man Says His Mother's Ghost Told Him to Do So.

Morris Kirkland, a prisoner in the county jail at Canon City, Colo., sent for Sheriff Eberstadt said he had been impelled by a dream, in which the ghost of his dead mother counseled him to tell the truth concerning the killing of Donald MacGinn.

His story to the sheriff implicated John Smith and Charles Bosley, now in jail, who have since confessed.

Prior to the confession of Kirkland little was known of the crime. MacGinn had cashed a check and was attacked by three negroes, who bent him fatally and hid his body. He survived long enough to tell his story.

Lower Hats For Women.

Small hats will be the rule in women's headgear for next winter, according to delegates attending the Millinery Traveling Men's National association convention, which met at Indianapolis. Apparently, however, the salesmen don't expect the small hat to remain in vogue forever, as they adopted resolutions protesting against the proposal of railway companies to limit the size of trunks to forty-five inches in height.

Courier Grange Column

Wilson Grange No. 719

Wilson Grange met in regular session Saturday, July 22, 1911, with an attendance of 33 members and four visitors.

Worthy Master George J. Ingham called the meeting to order and filled the vacant offices.

During the business session a few bills were presented, two communications were read by the secretary in regard to the meeting of Pomona Grange, August 10 with Boyne River Grange, and the discontinuance of public drinking cups.

The members voted to have a bee and get the material on the ground for the building of the dining hall on Monday, July 31.

George Davis and Mark Collins were appointed to act as members of dance committee. A dance was given out for August 5.

Two candidates were initiated in the third and fourth degrees. This was followed by a short program consisting of readings, recitations, and songs. The finance committee reported a balance on hand of $70.51.

The president of the Ladies' Auxiliary announced that the next meeting would be held with Sister Laura Hudson August 4.

Brother Richard Lewis gave some very helpful suggestions to the members.

Grange closed in form, after which ice cream and cake were served by the ladies.

Blacksmithing work of all kinds, give me a call. J. S. Baker, successor to Sam Beaubien.

Horton Bay Grange No. 338

Horton Bay Grange met in regular session Friday evening, July 21, at Horton Bay. Meeting called to order by Past Master George Long. One application for membership was received. Two candidates were initiated in the third and fourth degrees.

Grange closed in form with 16 members present. The next meeting will be August 4.

HANDSOME BOOKLET

Board of Trade at Traverse City Believe in Advertising Its Products

"The Fruit Agricultural" booklet, upon which the publicity committee of the Board of Trade of Traverse City has been working for the past four months, has just been issued. This is the second booklet issued by the publicity committee this year and is the handsomest and most complete piece of publicity ever issued.

It has been the aim of the committee to gather information and views pertaining solely to the Grand Traverse region which embraces the counties of Grand Traverse, Benzie, Leelanau and parts of Antrim, Charlevoix and Kalamazoo. A map of which territory is shown in outline on the inside back cover. "Grand Traverse Fruit and Agriculture" is designed as a companion to Grand Traverse the Summer Land.

The back cover of the booklet, shows at the top a branch of beautiful red cherries and below a fancy package of light and dark cherries with the inscription "Grand Traverse Cherries from Branch to Buyer."

CAMPAIGN PUBLICITY

Bill is Passed in the United States Senate.

Candidates Limited in Expenditures—Expenses Must be Published

The most drastic campaign publicity legislation ever passed in either branch of congress was adopted by the senate practically without a dissenting vote. Using the pre-election publicity bill passed by the house of representatives as a basis, the senate constructed during the day a proposed law with the following important features:

No candidate for the senate or house shall spend in the election more than a sum equal to 10 cents for each voter in his district or state.

No senatorial candidate shall spend a total of more than $10,000 in the primary election, and general election; and no candidate for the house shall spend more than $5,000.

Publicity must be given to all primary campaign contributions and expenditures.

All general election expenses must be made public before the election, beginning 15 days before election and making publication each sixth day until election.

All promises of political jobs must be made public. The bill further makes it illegal to promise political places to obtain election support, or to aid in influencing election of any member of a state legislature.

The bill will be the subject of probably prolonged conferences between the two houses. It originated in the house, as a part of the democratic legislative program and was designed to require the publication of expenditures before election which is not required by the existing publicity law.

The republicans in the house unsuccessfully attempted to extend the bill to cover primary election expenses. In the senate today the primary election amendment, coupled with more radical amendments, were adopted with little opposition.

The senate amendments authorized by the committee on privileges and elections required publicity of all primary election expenses and all pledges of political jobs and favors. Some objection to this was made on the ground that primary elections were not within the control of congress. The amendment was finally adopted.

The more rigid portion of the bill limited the amount a senatorial or congressional candidate may spend in any election, and prohibiting the making of all campaign pledges, was proposed by Senator Reed of Missouri, and adopted only after a short debate.

Senator Reed referred to the campaign expense statement filed by Senator Stephenson of Wisconsin showing expenditures of approximately $107,000 and to other large sums spent by senatorial candidates. He finally offered an amendment putting the total expenditure by any candidate at a sum not to exceed 10 cents per head for the voters in the candidate's state. Senator Reed said this would permit a senatorial candidate in New York to spend nearly $200,000 in this election, while the candidate in Nevada could spend only about $1,000.

The Reed amendment was defeated once, but was renewed and adopted. At one time he had the limit of expenses at $5,000 for a senate candidate and $1,500 for a house candidate; but at the suggestion of Senator Owen of Oklahoma this was increased to $10,000 for the senatorial candidate and $5,000 for the house candidate.

Under the new law, the right price—call and see. J. S. Baker's Implement store.

What do You Think of This?

A couple of our summer visitors met in McCann's bakery and in greeting each other made the following remarks: "Why, how do do Mrs. W. how are you this summer." The lady replied she was quite well and "was enjoying the glorious weather, then added: "And how are you, Mrs. P?" who replied: "Oh, dear, not very well, thank you. Was out into the country this morning in my car, and so many of the farmers were making hay that I am really about sick with hay fever!"

Provisions of New Law Affect Half a Million Men.

Various provisions of the naturalization law, passed five years ago, are now in effect, and a study of them seems to indicate that half a million men who have taken out first papers during the last five years will find it impossible to get their second papers.

The leading provision of the new law is that before receiving his second papers the applicant must fill out a new blank containing fifty questions. This he must send at his own expense to Washington. Second papers cannot be granted until the Washington office has verified the proof of the man's landing here. It has been the custom to accept a man's sworn statement as to his landing and the sworn statement of two witnesses.

HE BREEDS TOADS.

Colorado Man Uses Them to Kill Off Flies.

A unique garden is that of J. V. Crane of Greeley, Colo., devoted to the breeding of toads as well as the raising of garden truck. Mr. Crane has caught hundreds of toads and put them on his place. He says that they are the worst enemy of the fly and that the time will come when people will domesticate them for the purpose of ridding premises of flies.

Toads have cleared every fly from the Crane place, and neighbors attribute absence of flies from their premises to the toad garden.

The Banana in Medicine.

Recent experiments indicate that the juice of the banana may be efficacious in the treatment of diphtheria and other maladies of the throat. A substance resembling penicillin and called bromelain has been isolated from banana juice and has been shown to possess the property of dissolving albuminous matter such as forms the obstructing membrane characteristic of diphtheria. Dr. Flascher employs a syrup made from bananas in cases of bronchial affection. A crystalline substance called mannitol is obtained from the banana and is employed in the composition of various remedies for throat and lung troubles.

Coal Mined by Machines.

Almost exactly 50 per cent of Indiana coal production in 1909 was won by the use of machines, the machine mined product amounting to 7,408,829 short tons. In 1908 the machine mined coal amounted to 5,234,092 short tons, or 43 per cent of the total. Machines of the chain breast pattern appear to be preferred in the mines of Indiana, 391 out of a total of 431 in use in 1909 being chain machines. Of the others, 227 were pick machines and 13 long wall. In 1908 out of a total of 507 machines in use 352 were chain machines, 146 were pick machines and 9 were long wall.

Was on the English Starling.

The department of agriculture is just now waging a war on the importers of the English starling. The pestiferous English sparrow now unnumbered in every section of the country probably never would have been introduced on the nation had it not been for some faddist's notion, and in the case of the starling the government is strenuously opposed to repeating and adding to the sparrow nuisance. Moreover, the starling is an eater of small grain and is capable of causing vast devastation in the fields.

Farm and Garden

GROSBEAK IS OUR FRIEND.

Much Maligned Little Bird Is Active Enemy of Destructive Insects.

The grosbeak is a very much maligned bird and instead of being destructive to crops he is, on the contrary, of great benefit, according to farmers' bulletin 454, just issued by Secretary Wilson. The bulletin states that seven kinds of flies, commonly known as the grosbeaks, summer within our boundaries. A majority of these are good friends of the farmer and deserve to be widely known in order that their services may be appreciated. The grosbeaks are easily distinguished from other flies by their stout form, bright plumage, massive bills and melodious voices. They live largely in agricultural regions and secure most of their food about cultivated lands. They perform invaluable service in destroying many of our worst insect pests.

The rose breasted species is a great destroyer of the potato bug. He breeds over Kansas and the mountains of Tennessee. The investigations of the department show that the bird is fond of green peas, but invariably consumes enough injurious insects to more than offset the damage. He has become famous for his preying on the Colorado potato beetle, and no less than one-tenth of the total food it consumes has been proved to be the potato beetle. It attacks the cucumber beetle. It has proved an active enemy of the Rocky mountain locust during that insect's ruinous invasions, and among the other pest it consumes are the spring and fall caterpillars, orchard and forest tent caterpillars, tussock, grassy and brown web moths, plum curculio, army worm and corn bug. In fact, it attacks the worst enemies of agriculture.

Alfalfa Will Pay Big Interest on Money

ILLINOIS ALFALFA GROWER'S MEETING

Five Per Cent Paid on Five Hundred Dollar Land

Limestone and Inoculation Secret of Alfalfa Success—Other Points From Successful Growers

The man who thinks it impossible to make expenses on $200 land ought to have been at the Illinois Alfalfa Grower's meeting, at the Grout farm, June 29. He would have been convinced that alfalfa on $200 land beats a gold mine or a block of stock in the sugar trust. He would have had it proven to him by census figures that alfalfa will enable the Illinois farmer to pay interest on $500 land. Here are the figures:

The average yield of corn in Illinois last year was 39.1 bushels to the acre. The average farm price December 1 was 38 cents a bushel. The value of the crop per acre was $14.85. Oats averaged 38 bushels, and sold December 1 for 30 cents per bushel, making a return per acre of $11.40. The yield of wheat was 15 bushels and the price 88 cents, making a return of $13.20 per acre. The cost of raising an acre of corn, exclusive of rent or interest and taxes is $7.50; oats $5.08 and wheat $6.50. The amount left for rent profit was $6.28 in the case of the corn, $5.72 in the case of oats, and $6.50 in the case of wheat.

The same year the average yield of alfalfa in Illinois was three tons to the acre, and the average farm price $11 a ton, making the returns $33 per acre.

The cost of putting up alfalfa hay is about $1.50 a ton, according to the figures given out by men who have grown it. Six dollars is a liberal estimate of the cost of preparing the soil and putting in the alfalfa seed. Where the field is left for six years this will make the seeding expenses a dollar an acre a year. Alfalfa usually needs one good dressing a year to split up the clumps and kill weeds. The cost of this is about 50 cents. This makes a total yearly cost of $6 an acre to be charged to the alfalfa field. Deducting this from the value of the hay leaves $27.

Deducting 50 cents an acre for taxes in the case of each of these crops, it is easy to figure the land valuation on which each one would pay five per cent interest. We thus find that corn would pay five per cent interest on $135 land; oats on $104 land; wheat on $120 land, and alfalfa on $330 land. It must be remembered, too, that the alfalfa adds considerable nitrogen to the soil, while the other crops add nothing.

Grain prices were lower than common on December 1, 1910, so that the figures for the year previous might be more typical. Figured on this basis, the corn would pay interest on $300 land; oats on $160 land, and wheat on $169 land. Accurate alfalfa figures for that year are not obtainable, but even on the basis of the 1910 figures the alfalfa is still considerably ahead.

The possibilities of alfalfa are much greater than three tons to the acre with an average farm price of $11 a ton. At present good alfalfa hay will bring $20 a ton, and it is worth as much as $15 a ton all last winter. Alfalfa comes within one per cent of containing as much protein as wheat bran, and hence, from the stockman's standpoint, is worth almost as much, pound for pound. "The silo and alfalfa solve the whole problem of dairy feeding," says J. P. Mason, an experienced dairyman of Elgin. "I feed the cow plenty of silage and fill their racks with alfalfa, and then if they don't give milk, it ain't my fault."

Mr. Mason gets from four to five tons of alfalfa hay to the acre. Mr. Fred Hatch of Spring Grove, one of the pioneer alfalfa growers of the state, gets about the same amount. Mr. George F. Tullock of Rockford gets about five tons. It was the consensus of opinion that the man who has learned to grow alfalfa can raise four to five tons to the acre as easily as he can 60 bushels of corn. It takes Mr. Grout to get enthusiastic over the ultimate possibilities of alfalfa. He tells of seven-eighths of an acre near Rockford that produces $100 worth of hay last year. He believes that an average of $100 worth of hay to the acre is possible on almost any Illinois farm. At this rate Illinois land can go to $1,830 an acre and still pay five per cent interest—but figures are wholly inadequate to express an alfalfa grower's enthusiasm.

One of the chief objections to alfalfa has been the trouble in finding a place for it in the rotation. Dr. Hopkins gives the following as a good rotation: "The farm is divided into five fields, on one of which alfalfa is raised for five years. A rotation of corn, oats and clover, is carried on the other four fields. The alfalfa field is changed every five years, so that in 25 years the alfalfa has been raised on every field on the farm. In this rotation the first crop of clover is left on the ground to furnish humus and nitrogen, and the second cut for seed. The alfalfa furnishes the roughage."

Limestone and inoculation seem to be the secrets of success with alfalfa. An application of four or five tons of limestone per acre will go a long way toward insuring success with alfalfa on any Illinois farm. While there are a few alfalfa growers who have succeeded without direct inoculation, most of them regard it as very important. "I tried alfalfa 15 years without success," said E. D. Funk of Shirley. "Finally I sent to Nebraska for two sacks of alfalfa soil. The boys around town learned, by golly, that I was getting Nebraska dirt to put on my Illinois field. I got so I hardly dared go to town. My 10 or 15 hired men almost laughed me off the place. Even the girls in the kitchen laughed at me. Well, I went in to the town in the night and stole those sacks of dirt from the depot. The next day there was a circus in town and I gave all my men a vacation. I stayed home and sowed that dirt in strips across my alfalfa field. Early the next spring I went out to look at that field the shoots were four to five inches high where I spread the dirt, while the rest of the field showed no sign of life. That converted me to inoculation."

Soil from a successful alfalfa field, sweet clover soil, or manure from alfalfa fed cattle, have all been effective for inoculation. Half a wagon load of dirt to the acre will inoculate a field. Mr. Tullock sows the dirt by hand from the back end of a wagon. Some of the other growers mix it with straw and spread it with a manure spreader.

It pays to have the alfalfa field very fertile. A liberal application of manure helps to get a stand. Ground rock—phosphate—is also good.

Most of the central Illinois farmers prefer to sow alfalfa early in the fall, following a crop of small grain or clover. Mr. Hatch, who lives in the northern part of the state, sows his alfalfa seed in the spring with a nurse crop, and gets a good stand unless the oats happen to go down. The usual rate of seeding is 29 pounds to the acre broadcast or 22 to 15 drilled.

Some farmers object to alfalfa because they have to "make hay all summer." From one standpoint this is an advantage as the farmer who expects to make hay three or four times during the summer can afford to hire his men by the month instead of depending on day labor at a time when it is scarce and hard to get. Having this extra help will enable him to keep his work up in better shape.

Dr. Hopkins brought out the point that alfalfa is not so easily injured by rain as clover. Mr. Stone, of Springfield, cuts the hay late in day, so that the plant can dry before the leaves wither, as evaporation takes place more rapidly through the leaves. Some of the growers rake the hay as soon as it is cut, cock it up, put on canvas caps, and leave it for two or three days. The cocks are opened two or Communicated.

As a result of a paving controversy in the council chambers last evening the matter has been tabled for one week that it may have further consideration. A singular part of the discussion is the fact that a minority of the city council, including the mayor, seem to insist on overlooking the difference in the Howland bid and that furnished by the Cleveland Trinidad Asphalt Company for laying a concrete pavement. The Cleveland Trinidad Asphalt Pavement Company's champions insist merely that theirs was the cheaper bid, but through all their insistence they do not get down to a brass tacks comparison and seem to wish to dodge such a comparison. The Cleveland Trinidad proposition is a 6 inch thickness of an 8 to 1 mixture with a plain exposed edge on their expansion joints, while the Howland specifications are for a 7 inch pavement, or 1 inch thicker than the other and of a 6 to 1 mixture with a steel bonded expansion joint to protect it from the heavy traffic.

That the Howland specifications are superior there can be little doubt, and the matter seems to be pretty well understood by the property owners on the streets concerned, as well as the tax payers of the city generally, and there is no doubt that the balance of opinion by a preponderance is in favor of the acceptance of the Howland bid.

From the standpoint of a taxpayer, I would suggest that Mr. Howland and the representative of the other paving company circulate petitions among the property holders and tax payers of the city at large, setting forth clearly their respective claims; and that the result of this action be thoroughly weighed by the council, and that the conclusion of the matter be based on the results of the showing made by the respective petitioners. As a result of this showing the council would certainly be vindicated in letting the contract according to the popular expression and it would be a matter of fact just about wash the hands of the mayor and council of the whole proposition, as far as any consequences are concerned.

MICHIGAN DAIRY LAW

All Dairies Under Supervision of State Department

All Factories and Dealers Required to File Annual Report and Register

The following abstract is given of the law relating to dairies now in force in this state.

Whenever it is determined by the dairy and food commissioner, his deputy or inspectors, that any person is using, selling or furnishing to any skimming station, creamery, cheese factory, condensed milk factory, milk depot, dairy farm, milk dealer, the retail trade, or to any consumer of milk, any impure or unwholesome milk or cream, caused by the insanitary or filthy care or handling of the cows, the use of unclean utensils, unwholesome food or from any other cause, the person so offending shall be notified and warned by the commissioner, his deputy, or inspectors not to use, sell or furnish such milk or cream at any of the places or to any of the persons above mentioned. A failure to obey such notice and warning and the continued sale of such milk is made a misdemeanor, punishable by fine or imprisonment or both.

Whenever it is determined by the dairy and food commissioner that insanitary conditions exist in the operation of any skimming station, creamery, cheese factory, condensed milk factory, milk depot, or farm dairy, the proprietor or manager of the same shall be notified and warned by the commissioner, his deputy or inspectors, to place such skimming station, creamery, etc., in a sanitary condition. A failure to obey such notice and warning is made a misdemeanor, punishable by fine or imprisonment or both.

The removal of cream or any part thereof, from milk to be sold as pure milk to any manufacturing in which milk is used as a material in the process of production, or in the adulteration of milk by the addition of water, chemicals, preservatives or any other foreign substance is made a misdemeanor and punishable by a fine or imprisonment or both.

All factories, skimming stations or milk depots where milk and cream is received by purchase or otherwise from three or more persons, must register, with the dairy and food department, and file an annual report accompanied by a registration fee of five dollars on or before April 1st of each year.

An Open Letter to the Temperance People of Emmet and Charlevoix Counties

I do not know if the managers of the local option forces in Emmet and Charlevoix counties are aware of the situation which exists in the city of Petoskey or not, but I can hardly believe that they are totally ignorant of the facts.

Of my own personal knowledge I cannot speak, but scores of reliable people have told me that it is as easy to secure a drink of whiskey, beer or any other kind of "booze" in the city of Petoskey today as it was when saloons were openly licensed. They tell me that Charlevoix people, some of them young men and girls, can be seen in the booze emporiums in our sister city, partaking of drinks which are openly dispensed to all who come and are known to be "right," and they tell me that the drinking places are crowded by our summer resorters; who, with the greater freedom of the city, look upon this public drinking in a different light than we of the smaller towns.

If all this is true—and it is unquestionably true—the good temperance people who believe in prohibition of the sale of liquor are laying themselves under a heavy responsibility by permitting this state of affairs to continue unchecked and unopposed.

Charlevoix is dry—there is not a place in this city, nor, I believe, in the county, where one can buy a drink of intoxicating liquor. If there is the officials do not know it, and will be mighty glad to have anyone tell them where it is. The time will come when the question of continuing the present plan of county prohibition will come up for discussion and the people will have to decide. If the temperance advocates in Charlevoix and Emmet counties allow liquor to be openly sold in the city of Petoskey without making the slightest attempt to stop it, they will have only themselves to blame when this city and county goes "wet." The licensed saloon, under proper surveillance and supervision, is in my opinion less detrimental than the open "booze" joints now running in our sister city. I believe that the majority of our people want prohibition as we have it here—prohibition that does prohibit the sale of liquor openly. But if towns fifteen miles away, and as easily accessible as Petoskey, are to be allowed to sell whiskey openly, right under the eyes of the temperance people, and under the eyes of the officers of the law, without the slightest attempt to stop it, the result may not be as pleasing to the friends of temperance as they might wish.

In the meantime—What are you going to do about it?

GRANGE BUILDING

To Be Erected on the Fair Grounds at East Jordan

Patrons are Taking Hold of the Matter with Enthusiasm

At the last meeting of the Charlevoix County Pomona grange it was decided to accept the offer of the Agricultural Society of space and erect a grange building on the fair grounds at East Jordan, H. L. Olney, E. B. Ward and Peter Knudson were appointed a committee to take the matter in charge.

At a meeting of the committee held in East Jordan recently plans were accepted for the new building which will be 24x40 feet, divided into an assembly room 24x24, two cloak rooms 10x12 and two toilets. The estimated cost is $300 and the members of the order are taking hold of the raising of the required fund to erect and furnish the building with enthusiasm. Pomona grange having voted $25 and several of the subordinate granges $25 toward the project.

The benefit to the members in having a place on the grounds where they will be at home will be plain to every one while the hall itself will be a fine addition to the buildings on the grounds and altogether another proof of the hustling ability of Charlevoix county grangers.

HEALTH RULES FOR RESORTS

Has Been Adopted by Michigan State Board of Health

The state board of health has adopted the following for summer resorts:

"Where there is no water or sewer system the dry earth closet should be installed. The contents of the same should be removed and buried at least one month during the resort season and oftener if necessary."

"A garbage can or barrel with a tight-fitting cover should be used at every cottage and the contents must be removed two or three times a week and buried at least one foot underground."

"Throwing tin cans or bottles on the beach or on the grounds is prohibited. A covered barrel or box should be placed at the rear of each cottage for receiving such refuse, which should be removed to some suitable place and buried as often as may be found necessary."

"Cleaning fish upon the beach is strictly prohibited. It should be done back and away from the cottage and the refuse immediately buried."

"Refuse from lunch counters, lemonade stands, pavilions and other concessions must be put in tightly covered cans or boxes, removed daily and buried."

"Throwing refuse of any kind into the lake is strictly forbidden."

"It is the duty of the local health officers to enforce these rules. It is the duty, under penalty, of the property owners and tenants to comply with them."

NOTICE

Bids will be received up to and including Thursday, August 10, 1911, for the erection of a new school house by Marion Township, No. 6, Phelps, Michigan.

The committee reserves the right to reject any or all bids received. Specifications of building may be had by calling on or addressing—

BIG LIST OF NEW LAWS

Went Into Effect on the First Day of August

PASSED LAST SESSION OF LEGISLATURE

List of the Most Important Enactments

New Mortgage Tax Law—Primary Election Law Is Amended—Change in Use of Primary School Money

Toesday the state got a new set of laws as a result of the operations of the last legislature. Included in the list are some of wide importance and some of insignificant purpose, the new mortgage tax law being one of the most important and the law preventing the hunting of rabbits with ferrets and guinea pigs being about the limit the other way. These acts are the ones which go into effect in accordance with the provisions of the constitution, the legislators not having given them immediate effect. The most important ones follow:

To amend the general banking laws to provide that in case the capital or any state bank becomes impaired an assessment may be ordered by the state banking commissioner against the stockholders to repair the deficiency.

Making it unlawful for any state officer having his salary fixed by law retaining any fees collected for the performance of his official duty.

Designating New Year's day, Memorial day, Fourth of July, Labor day, Thanksgiving and Christmas, all Saturdays and days designated by the president or governor as holidays, as holidays in the public schools and requiring schools to hold commemorative exercise on Lincoln's and Washington's birthday.

Amending an act relative to the payment of tuition of pupils and providing for their transportation to another district to complete their studies above the eighth grade.

To provide for the incorporation of companies to insure against loss by hail.

Authorizing the state tax commission to investigate tax valuation and employ experts to assist in investigating valuations.

Amending an act relative to county school commissioners and examiners.

Providing for employing convicts on state highways.

Prescribing the qualifications of telegraph operators, railroad conductors, firemen, brakemen and switchmen.

Defining the right of married women to their earnings.

Authorizing the providing of school books for indigent children.

Amending the home rule act relative to cities.

Authorizing the killing of beaver under certain regulations.

Regulating billiard and pool rooms located outside of incorporated cities and villages.

Allowing the deposit of county funds in private banks.

Limiting the amount of primary school money which certain school districts may draw in the annual apportionment.

Amending the act relative to the employment of women and children.

Authorizing school boards to acquire sites for agricultural schools play-grounds, etc.

Authorizing boards of supervisors to borrow money to maintain fairs and industrial exhibits intended to assist in the development of the resources of the counties.

Authorizing the state to condemn private property for public use.

Prohibiting the assurance of trading stamps.

Allowing thrashers to place a lien on grain which they have thrashed.

Empowering boards of supervisors to levy a special tax to be used in advertising the agricultural advantages of a county.

To prohibit rebates on insurance policies.

Making it unlawful for foreign insurance companies to write insurance in this state except through licensed agents.

To enable persons between 16 and (Continued on page 8.)

The body of Walter Neacham, a married man thirty-four years of age, was found in the park at Boyne City Wednesday morning. An inquest was held before Justice Shepard, which brought the facts that the dead man had formed one of a drinking party the night before. The jury decided that death was caused by heart failure from alcoholism.

The members of the Fruit Growers' society located at Sutton's Bay Leelanau county, are arranging to charter a car to take them to the Paul Rose farm near Frankfort that they may inspect this place and learn by talking with Michigan's greatest horticulturist, how to produce fruits that are commercially profitable. It is figured that it will take two days to complete the outing and give the orchards the inspection they deserve. This is a new departure in the matter of getting the latest ideas regarding fruit growing into general use. It is believed however, that the plan will prove the most successful of the many tried so far.

three hours before hauling, and the hay goes into the barn or stack in splendid shape. This method is rather slow for haying on a large scale, however. A better plan perhaps, is to make the newly-cut hay into windrows with a side delivery rake, and let it cure in the windrows before putting up.

A thorough discing occasionally helps to keep the land free from grass and weeds. A little manure on the thin spots is better than re-seeding, in the opinion of Mr. Hatch and some of the other growers.

In the act of leaving Josie caught Nat's eye. She hung back for an instant, withering him with a glare. "Oh-h!" she cried. "How did you dare pretend to care for me?"

He bowed politely. "It was one of the rules, Josie."

"There's no need to tell you, I guess, that the engagement is broken."

"None whatever, Miss Lockwood. Good evening."

"Come, Richard!"

Arm in arm they left, with the haughty tread of the elect, while Pete Willing lurched to Duncan's side and caught his arm.

"Come 'long to jail, Misch'r Duncan," he said, with sympathy. "Mush bes-scher."

"You look after him, Pete," Lockwood turned to leave with a final shot for Duncan. "I'll tend to your case in the morning, young man, and I'll make you wish you never came to this town."

"You needn't trouble, I feel that way about it already. Good night."

Lockwood left them, snarling. Nat caught Kellogg's eye and began to giggle. But Pete was still holding him fast, partially, beyond doubt for snip-pet.

"You've been saved just in time, Misch'r Duncan," he commented. "You're mighty lucky man. Now, listen; you better make tracks. I don't got no warrant to hold you, and I wouldn't if I had."

"You're a good fellow, Pete, but you needn't worry. I'm not the man they think me, and it'll be easy to prove."

"What?" said Pete. "Just the same, you better get out 'r you may have to marry her off 'all."

"No, I won't."

"Thank Gawd fr that!" Pete exclaimed in unadulterated gratitude. He swung widely toward the door and by a miracle found it. "G' night, Misch'r Duncan. I feel a good 'bout this; I'm goin' to get home 'nd face m' wife 'G' night."

"Good night, Pete."

"Well," said Kellogg after a pause. "That was a bit of luck."

"Luck?" Nat seized his hat and began to turn off the lights. "It's more luck than I thought there was in the whole world. Come along."

"Where are you going?"

"First to see Lockwood and have it out with him."

"No, you aren't," Kellogg laughed as Nat locked the door. "You're going to leave Lockwood to me. I'll manage to ease his mind. You've got infinitely more important matters to attend to, and the sooner you find her the better, Nat."

As Duncan hurried homeward the rolling of the thunder grew sharp, more instant upon the flashes. When there was no wind the air seemed to quiver with terror, as a dog cowers to the whip.

But of this Duncan was barely conscious.

He gained the gate in the fence of wood paling, opened it and entered. The lawn and house were lit with the unearthly radiance of moonlight threatened by eclipse. He could see the light in Graham's study and through the open doors the faint glow of the hall lamp. But there was no one visible.

He hurried up the path, tortured by impatience, fear, longing, despair. Then he saw what seemed at first a pale shadow detach itself from darker shades in the shrubbery and move toward him.

"Nat, is it you?"

"Betty."

His whole heart was in that cry. The girl thrilled to its timbre as

What did he mean?

"Do you happen to remember that I told you awhile ago I was engaged to Josie Lockwood?"

"Nat! Could I forget? Why?"

"Because it's broken off, Betty."

"Broken off? How? Why?"

"Because it had to be, sweetheart—because I love you."

She was very close to him then. Her uplifted face shone like marble in the fading light.

"Nat, I—I don't understand."

"Then listen. I must tell you. It was all a plan, a scheme, my coming here, Betty. Everything I did, said, thought, was part of a contemptible trick. I meant to marry Josie Lockwood, whom I'd never seen, for her money. Now you know what I was doing. But it's different now. I'm not the same man who came to Badville ten months ago. I've learned a little to understand the right, I hope. I've learned to love and reverence goodness and purity and unselfishness, and—and I want to be a man, the kind of man you thought me, a man worthy of you and your love, Betty, because I love you. I want you to be my wife. And—oh, Betty, Betty—I need you to help me."

His voice broke. He waited, every nerve and fiber of him tense for her answer. While he had been speaking the crash of the storm had blotted out the moon. There was only dark, dense darkness—so thick he could not even see the shimmer of her dress.

Then suddenly she was in his arms, shaking and sobbing, straining him to her.

"Oh, Nat, my Nat! I've loved you from the first day I ever saw you! You know I have."

"Betty—sweetheart!"

There came an abrupt, furious pattering of heavy drops of water beating upon the foliage, splashing and rebounding from the house.

"Forever and ever, Nat?"

"Forever and ever and a day, my dear—my dear!"

A little later an anxious voice—old Sam's—bathed them from the house.

have a vague notion that there are such beings, but not among seafaring men. To refer to the average sailor as either an angel or a saint would strike that worthy as about the most absurd thing ever. As well look for translucent coal-broilers or the Hot Carriers' Association for the Advancement of The Arts.

Nevertheless the life savers are "angels in oilskins," whether they want to be or not. That is too good a phrase to let go. We will not insist on their being heroes or saints, as the hero-lushness is rather overdone anyway, and the saint proposition is rather too paradoxical to fit any kind of seafaring man. But an angel is different. We think of an angel as a rather vicious being who goes about doing good. That is your life savor all over again. The name fits him like a glove, or rather like his oilskin. He may use language and do other things that red hooded sailors do, but what of that? He risks his life for others, and we are told on the highest authority that greater love has no man than this. Therefore an "angel in oilskins" the life savor must and shall be.

The United States life saving service consists of 281 stations distributed along the Atlantic and Pacific coasts, the Gulf and the great lakes. At each station are a keeper and a number of surfmen. The business of these men is to patrol the coasts, especially at danger points, and to rescue those imperiled by the sea, whether they be the passengers on a wrecked liner or some venturesome swimmer that goes too far.

Along Every Coast.

The 281 life saving stations are grouped in thirteen districts, as follows: First district, the coasts of Maine and New Hampshire; Second district, Massachusetts; Third district, Rhode Island and Fishers Island; Fourth district, Long Island; Fifth district, New Jersey; Sixth district, from Cape Henlopen, Delaware, to Cape Charles, Maryland; Seventh district, from Cape Henry, Virginia, to Cape Fear, North Carolina; Eighth district, South Carolina, Georgia and eastern Florida; Ninth district, Gulf coast; Tenth district, Lakes Erie and Ontario; Eleventh district, Lakes Huron and Superior; Twelfth district, Lake Michigan; Thirteenth district, Pacific coast. In addition to these, there is a station at the falls of the Ohio river at Louisville and another at Nome, Alaska.

The report of the life saving service for 1910 is just out. From this we learn many interesting and thrilling things. The details of this dry report are as fascinating as a story by W. Clark Russell or Laura Jean Libbey. In a perfectly matter of fact manner it recounts tales of daring, heroism and adventure that would make a wooden Indian quiver with excitement.

For the whole year the number of vessels reported as seriously disabled or wrecked was 1,462. Of these only seventy-four were lost. The number of persons aboard was 6,991. Only fifty-three, or less than one in a hundred, lost their lives. This is a remarkable showing, and much of the credit is due to the life saving service.

Money to Destroy Life, Not Save It.

During the last congress an effort was made to increase the pay of the keepers and men; also to pension those who had grown old in the service. Strange as it may seem, this attempt failed. Millions were voted for the construction of new battleships with which to destroy life, but a mere pittance in comparison was refused for the saving of life. During the months of June and July of each year the surfmen are laid off. Only the keepers remain at the stations. In effect the entire coast is unguarded during these two months. Ostensibly the men are on a vacation. Yet no money is appropriated to supply their places. So far as Uncle Sam is concerned, anybody can drown or any ship can be wrecked during June or July. Yet this is the very season when thousands of surf bathers and hundreds of motor and other pleasure craft are in danger. In some happier era yet to be, when peace has really come to abide among men, people will look back at this civilization with surprise and amazement. They will say that in our age everybody talked about conserving life, but nobody believed in it; otherwise the legislative body of the most progressive nation of the world would not have appropriated millions for war, while refusing paltry thousands for the saving of life. I can see the wise men of the twenty-second century—puzzling their heads over this astounding fact. And yet we think ourselves just about the most advanced things that ever happened.

A German Use of the Sand Blast.

The cutting and wearing power of a stream of blown sand, long since utilized for various purposes, has been employed for testing building materials at the Gross-Lichterfelde Institute, in Germany. Granite, pine wood, limestone and other substances used in the construction and furnishing of buildings are subjected for about two minutes to the action of a blast of fine quartz sand under a pressure of two atmospheres. The results show the resisting powers of the substances tested to the effects of wear. This form of test is applicable to road building materials.

Important Coal Discovery.

The discovery of a seam of good quality coal which far exceeds in importance anything that has yet been found in the Kent coal area was placed on May 17 in a concession boring north of Dover, the seam proving to be no less than twelve feet ten inches thick. The seam was struck seventy feet below one nearly five feet thick and is believed to be second only to the great seam of South Staffordshire.

Polite Stationery and Writing Desk Supplies

Writing papers are a source of satisfaction or irritation to everyone who carries on correspondence. People of fine tastes show these refinements in their letter paper, and the color, texture, seal crest, or date or local name may all reflect this.

THE END.

Origin of the Turban.

The origin of the turban must be looked for not, as commonly believed, among Moslems, but as a sign of authority and honor dating back to the earliest periods of Jewish history.

The term used in the Hebrew Bible for putting on the bonnet of the high priest is from a root meaning "to blind round." The words ulter, hood, diadem, as used in the Old Testament, are only variations of the word turban. Jerome tells us that the turban has a place in the most ancient records of history. The variations as adopted by Mohammedans are many. Their own authorities hint at a thousand methods of arranging the turban, which show not only the tribe and religious distinction, but even the personal peculiarities of the wearer. An old legend traces the turban to an act of desperate courage recorded of the ancient Levantines. A brave band of warriors are said to have wrapped their winding sheets round their heads as they devoted themselves to certain death to save their comrades on the battlefield.

NATIONAL LIFE

"Angels in Oilskins," Who Offer Their Lives For Others.

By JAMES A. EDGERTON.

ANGELS in oilskins, "saints in son'westers" and "heroes of the surf" are some of the pet names applied to the life saving crews along our coasts, but not by the crews themselves. They detect the word "hero," as does every real man worthy of wearing it, and, as for angels and saints, the life savers may though a master hand had struck a chord upon her heartstrings.

"Nat, what—what is it?"

"Betty, I want to tell you something."

She came very slowly toward him, torn alternately by fear and hope.

ROOSTER OSLERISM.

Certain poultry philosophers after solemn consideration have decreed that crows and chickens should be ostracized on their third birthday; that thereafter they are fit for breeding and laying.

We are not here to decide "How old is Ann?" but many will laugh at this rooster ostracism.

For instance, Dr. Nathan Sarnoff of Holden, Mass., will produce the record of his nine-year-old Buff Duche hen that laid 1,000 eggs in her first seven years and in her fourth year raised fifty-three chicks hatched from her own eggs. And J. H. C. Whiston

BIO BILL, EIGHT YEARS OLD.

Hampden Sidney, Va., will make history that his seven-year-old Rhode Island hen Minna from Nov. 1, 1903, to Dec. 10, 1910, laid 1,001 eggs, hatched twelve times and in her seventh season hatched two broods of chicks.

And Big Bill, the old cock in the picture, eight years old, will crow a cock and produce seven generations of cock and hen to prove that there is no arbitrary rule whereby a rooster's usefulness may be said to end on a fixed date.

Our English cousins will back this up by producing the record of the old White Game, the Ghost, which at twenty years was mated and begetting offspring.

Big Biddy, too, unlike human hens, will own up to her age and show it.

The length of usefulness of fowls depends on ancestry, care, breeding, manner of hatching and rearing. Fowls raised in a humane way best and longest. Chickens imbedded and brooded artificially and forced for egg production soon lose vitality. Before the end of the second year they often do not pay a profit and should go to the cook pot quick.

DON'TS.

Don't scold fowls for city market. Lower price.

Don't show birds simply to look some other fellow. You are apt to get faked. Then some one will tell you, "I told you so."

Don't give too many folks a piece of your mind. You may have none left for yourself.

Don't shoot off your mouth. A tongue that hangs off a snail and slaps off is an awful boomerang.

Don't let byones be byones when you owe for a newspaper. If you must give account for every idle word you say, you'll also have to toe the scratch for subs you do not pay.

Don't breed from squinty turkeys. If you want big, strong pullets, inferior stock will breed you lots of jabs.

Don't let hens drink from cow tracks in the barnyard. The hygienic hen and the healthy cock, the pure food sheep and the sanitary sow aren't found where filth is small and rot, but thrive on a clean, inviting spot.

Don't let the pigeons spoil the barn roof. Pigeons in a loft fly pay more than those that don't fly.

Don't raise broilers unless you are near a good broiler market. Where millionaires their broiler blow is where the broilers ought to go.

TIMELY HINTS FOR FARMERS

Summer Orchard Cultivation.

Cultivation of the orchard should generally be stopped by the end of July. Especially is this the case with old orchards that are being cultivated for the first time. An orchard, however, that has been cultivated constantly will receive little injury by cultivation at any time of the year.

It will then stop growing in midsummer and will spend the rest of its time and energy in hardening its wood. But the orchard that has not been cultivated or even one that has been cultivated in the spring of the year will be injured by cultivation in the late summer or fall. If, however, the trees are heavily laden with fruit, cultivation may continue a little later than if the trees were almost quite bare.

The extra amount of available plant food will then aid in producing the fruit, and the late development of buds and wood will not occur. In fact, during a dry season the late cultivation will prevent the fruit laden trees from becoming weakened from lack of moisture.

Keeping Poultry Runs Fresh.

There is more or less dry weather during the summer, and the runs must frequently be turned and the soil must be more or less fresh. The man who has the best interests of his flock at heart will once a week use a hand plow in such yards and stir up the soil, so as to make it loose and fresh. If he does this at night, the next morning the fowls will get at work scratching, turning worms and stirring things generally. It is wonderful how much they find in this turned up soil that furnishes them both amusement and food.

Summer Turnips.

The turnip requires a rich soil. It does best on freshly broken land. The late turnips may be sown broad just after some corn has been removed, usually during July or August. They may be stored in the cellar the same as carrots. To get the best quality of turnip it must be rapidly grown on rich, sandy land, free from fresh manure.—American Farm Journal.

Worms in Horses.

One of the best remedies for worms in horses is: Colic, two drams; ginger, one ounce; cloves, six drams; turpentine, one ounce; raw linseed oil, one pint. Divide into two doses and give one in the evening and the other in the morning. Follow this with a teaspoonful of dry sulphate of iron in the dry feed once each day for ten days.

THE FOAL'S FEET NEED ATTENTION.

An Important Matter That Is Often Neglected.

Many foals during the first months of their lives grow bad feet and stand badly, partly from nature and partly from lack of proper exercise on hard ground. Frequently the foal is compelled to remain in the stalls during the early suckling period, and this will almost always bring on abnormally developed feet. Lack of exercise on hard ground will allow the feet to grow faster than they wear off, hence the enlargement. Also, whether the foal has exercise or not during the very young stage, often the feet will be more or less irregular.

The foal's feet should be examined and trimmed frequently during the first six or eight months of its life, and they should receive regular attention till the foal becomes a full grown work horse. After the first few trials the young foal will allow its feet to be examined and trimmed without trouble. In fact, it will soon seem to enjoy the work. In trimming the foal's feet trim them so that they will be reasonably short and level. Since the hoofs are comparatively soft during its young age the work of trimming can best and easiest be done with a strong, sharp pocketknife.

Where the hoofs of a foal are not trimmed and it is inclined to stand or walk abnormally there will be more wearing on one part than another of the hoof to necessitate the abnormality. By frequent trimming during the early months of its life and keeping the feet perfectly level the feet and legs will gradually grow to normal position and shape, and the foal will walk with more ease and appear better generally. Allow the foal the freedom of a good pasture as much as possible to allow the feet to wear and harden.

The Silo a Money Saver.

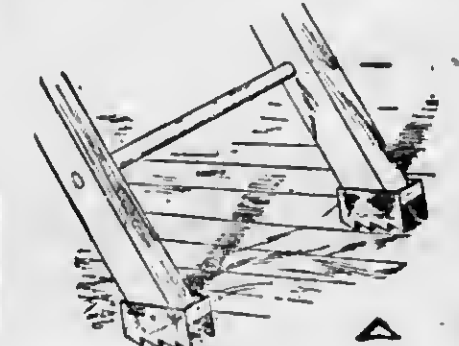

Silage is the salad for the cow. It not only supplies food elements in itself, but it helps in the digestion and assimilation of other feeds. And don't forget that the silo is the only means yet devised by which all of the corn crop can be saved.—Kansas Farmer.

Feed After Milking.

The cows should not be fed their roughage until the milking is started and before milking, and as far as possible the barn should be cleaned and aired also before milking, so that the foal air which takes milk so readily may escape.

Lower Holding Clips.

The lower end of a ladder may be kept from slipping by using a device made from heavy sheet metal, as shown in the accompanying illustration. The attachments are made to fit the wood loosely, and the edge intended for the lower part is notched like a saw. A hole is drilled through the metal, and a corresponding hole is bored in the wood for a draw pin or bolt. This makes them fit the wood, no matter at what angle the ladder stands, and also provides a way to quickly remove them.

The Vacuum Cleaner.

Vacuum cleaners were recently used with great success in a New York office building which had been visited by fire. In the removal of the water which had accumulated as the result of the presence of the firemen. The janitor was instructed to make every effort to have the offices in readiness for the occupants next morning, so that their business would not suffer any interruption, and in order to get rid of the water in the carpets and on the floors a number of vacuum cleaners were secured and put to work, with the result that things were in perfect order for the commencement of business the following morning.

THE IMPORTANCE OF DIPPING SHEEP.

Dipping sheep to be a practical success must be thoroughly done, and when it is there are no external parasites in the flock. Owing to the efficient work of the United States department of agriculture, scab has been almost entirely eradicated from the flocks of America. Still, there are occasional outbreaks, showing that in out of the way flocks it still exists. But the tick is with us in great numbers, and we must dip to rid the flock of that pest, writes P. D. Brown in Farm and Fireside.

There is no need for using poisonous dips which are dangerous to sheep and men. The poisonous dips will not stay in the wool long enough or be strong enough to kill the young ticks that hatch out a week after dipping, and as it takes two dippings anyway, and as two dippings of a nonpoisonous dip will thoroughly cleanse a flock, there is no reason for endangering men and animals with the poisonous dips. Neither does it pay to make one's own crude dip. The standard coal tar dips when properly applied are cheapest and absolutely efficient.

The underlying principle in the eradication of the tick or the scab is first to kill all the living parasites by immersing the sheep in the dip. Then dip the second time when the eggs that were in the wool are hatched and before the young have grown to full size and have laid eggs again. With the tick this time is nine to ten days. With the scab the time is five to six days. The best time is the week after shearing. The wool is short then and does not absorb a lot of dip. The dip should be heated to a temperature of just to 110 degrees F. and kept there. Each sheep should be kept in the dip one minute by the watch and the head should be submerged for no instant at least once. The dipped sheep should then be placed in a corral or pasture where sheep have not been for at least two weeks before so that there will be no live tick or scab mites to crawl on them. Every sheep and lamb must be dipped.

On the ninth or tenth day the flock should be dipped again the same as before. By dipping every sheep and lamb and putting them in a clean corral or pasture the flock will be free from ticks for all time. Then every sheep that is brought into the flock from other flocks should be dipped twice. If this plan is followed, the flock will always be clean.

In using the prepared dips one must follow the directions for the particular dip used, and the water and dip must be measured according to directions, and when it is and the temperature kept up the dipping will be absolutely efficient.

If for any reason the entire flock that is ticky cannot be dipped the week following shearing, the lambs should be dipped anyway, for soon after the sheep are shorn most of the ticks leave the sheep and go to the lambs. Thus the lambs become badly infested and should be dipped.

Reasons For a Silo.

The Colorado Agricultural college gives the following reasons why the dairyman should have a silo.

First.—By means of the silo more of the food value of forage can be saved than by any other method of preparation.

Second.—The silo gives the means of keeping in small compass a large quantity of forage safe from the weather and in convenient form to feed.

Third.—Forage placed in the silo keeps at a uniform quality, whereas field cured forage constantly deteriorates.

Fourth.—Considering the food value saved, the silo affords the cheapest means for forage preservation.

Fifth.—Because of the palatability and succulence the silage possesses higher feeding value than the same forage dry cured. Conservative feeders estimate that the silo doubles the value of the forage crop.

Sixth.—Silage can be used in summer and fall to supplement pasture.

Seventh.—It is proved that the silo effects a considerable saving in the cost of producing beef, mutton and milk.

Eighth.—The silo enables the farmer to keep more live stock, which promotes the rotation of crops and the preservation of soil fertility.

Ironton Grange No. 707.

Ironton Grange met in regular session, July 25, 1911 with 41 members and three visitors present.

Mrs. Peter Knudson sent in her resignation from the Woman's Work committee. Mrs. John Nason was appointed to fill the vacancy. Emil Lyngklip resigned from the committee for the picnic. J. Lewis was appointed to fill the vacancy. John Knudson said he would not act as captain of the degree team any longer but no action was taken on it.

One candidate was obligated in the first and second degree and two candidates were initiated in the third and fourth degrees.

The lecturer's program consisted of songs, stories, recitations and readings, and a talk by Brother Lisakunt from South Arm-grange.

For good of the order the motion was made and carried that Ironton Grange have a playing match. Committee appointed was Brothers John Knudson, Will Meggison, Ole Lyngklip.

A committee was appointed for getting vegetables and grain for fair. Committee is Brothers Peter Knudson, John Nason and Neil Lyngklip.

Worthy secretary was instructed to send for Brother L. R. Taft of Eveline Heights to speak at the picnic August 4.

Grange was then closed in regular form to meet again in two weeks.

RADICAL CHANGE IN TAXATION

Is the New System of Taxing Mortgages

WHICH TOOK EFFECT AUGUST FIRST

By January 1 Will be in Full Operation

Taxes May Still Continue to be Paid Under the General Law—List of Exemptions

The new mortgage tax law introduces a radical change in the method of mortgage taxation which will be of interest to our readers.

Heretofore mortgages have been taxed under the general taxation law. It has been claimed that mortgages, being only evidences of debt, ought not to be taxed at all. When money is loaned at six per cent and a tax is levied of from three to four per cent, it leaves the owner of the mortgage a net return of but about two per cent. The tendency has been to so invest the money as to avoid this tax. To equalize this taxation and avoid double taxation, and ensure the collection of a reasonable tax on all mortgages, this new mortgage tax law was devised.

Section one of the new law defines mortgage as follows:

"The word 'mortgage' as used herein shall include every mortgage or other instrument by which a lien is created over or imposed upon real property, notwithstanding it may also be a lien upon other property, or there may be other security for the debt, and shall also include executory contracts for the sale of real property, and deeds or other instruments that are given to secure debts."

Section two says that the tax shall be 50 cents for each $100 or major fraction thereof. It exempts libraries, armories, benevolent, charitable, educational and scientific institutions, but not fraternal or secret societies. It also exempts churches, church parsonages and buildings and loan mortgages.

Section three provides that this tax shall be paid to the county treasurer when such mortgage is presented for record. This mortgage must state true values and a willful misstatement makes the person so stating guilty of perjury.

Section six provides: "The owner of any mortgage which is now, or may be recorded before this act takes effect, may present to the county treasurer of the county in which said property is situated an affidavit setting forth the mortgage and the place of record thereof and the amount of principal secured thereby which is unpaid, and may pay a like tax of one-half of one per cent upon such amount, and thereafter said mortgage for the purpose of taxation is to be considered and treated the same as other mortgages provided for in this act. Said affidavit shall be recorded in the office of the register of deeds and shall be prima facie proof of the amount of the principal unpaid on said mortgage. Mortgages given prior to January 1, 1912 and on which the registry tax provided for in this act shall not be paid, shall remain under the present ad valorem system of taxation and shall be assessed and taxed under the present law."

Section eight provides: "No mortgage or land contract, which is subject to the tax imposed by this act shall be released, enforced, discharged or record or received in evidence in any action or proceeding at law or in equity, nor shall any assignment of or agreement extending any such mortgage or land contract be recorded until the tax imposed thereon by this act is provided. No judgment or final order in any action or proceedings at law or in equity shall be made for the foreclosure or enforcement of any such mortgage or land contract, which is subject to the tax imposed by this act, or any debt or obligation secured thereby, until the tax imposed by this act shall have been paid as provided in this act. The certificate of the county treasurer in form as hereinafter provided, shall be prima facie evidence of the payment of tax."

The auditor general has recently sent out the following explanation of the new law:

Owing to the many inquiries received at the attorney general's and auditor general's departments in reference to Act No. 111, Public Acts of 1911, same being the new mortgage tax law, it has been deemed advisable to prepare this pamphlet in explanation of such act.

Section six refers to mortgages which are of record, or which may be recorded before January 2, 1912. Under this section the owner of any such mortgage may, on or after August 1, 1911, present to the county treasurer of the county in which the mortgage property is located, the affidavit referred to in section six, and pay the tax on such mortgage as herein provided for. Upon such payment it becomes the duty of the county treasurer to furnish the certificate referred to in section eight. The affidavit can then be recorded in the office of the register of deeds, and such mortgages will not be subject to any further assessment for taxes. Such payment will, however, relieve the mortgage from assessment for taxes of 1911, for the reason that the assessment taxes of 1911 was practically completed before the taking effect of this act on August 1st.

"As to mortgages already of record, or which may be recorded before January 1st next, it is optional with the mortgagees whether or not they pay the taxes under this act. If, however, such taxes are not paid under this act, then the same will be subject to taxation under the provisions of the general tax law.

COST OF MARKETING

Address by H. F. Yoakum the Great Railroad Man

Farmers are Urged to Use More Business Methods

To the lack of proper business methods among the farmers as a whole is due the enormous difference between what the farmer receives for their products and what the consumers pay, said H. F. Yoakum, the railroad man, in an address before the farmers' congress.

Mr. Yoakum's subject was the "High Cost of Marketing" and his text in detail was based on the statement that the farmers of this country received $1,000,000,000 last year for what cost the consumers $13,000,000,000.

The difference of $12,000,000,000 he declared, was an absurd price for marketing the products of the farms.

"The industrial exports," he said, "are increasing over agricultural exports at the rate of seven to one, because factory products are marketed in a more businesslike way than farm products. The United States is now exporting $2,000,000,000 worth of goods a year.

"The neighborhood market house should become as important and as popular in the American life as the country schoolhouse. Popular education has been the strongest force in the development of America.

"These neighborhood cooperative selling plants should play almost as an important part in our future as the free schools have in the past. They will be of important educational value, as they will cause small farmers to make close study and applications of business methods.

"The government should spend some money to exploit proper marketing, just as it is doing in the development of good roads work. The government can exploit proper market facilities just as it now exploits the values of different soils for production.

"The government watches over the purity of manufactured food products, and it is just as important to spend money to find ways and means of decreasing expense of distribution of products in order to give the user better and cheaper food, and the grower better and safer returns for his work. This market department should be broad enough to reach all the farmers of the country.

"It should give the country the benefit of a thorough investigation of improved marketing and selling systems, including all means of distributing and handling. Results will be immediate.

"The farmer will reduce his selling cost when he learns in detail about wagon haul costs, cold storage charges, distribution in cities, profit to dealers, losses through deterioration, and all things which enter into marketing expense. As the selling expenses decrease so will the returns to the farmer increase, and the cost of living decrease."

IN NEW DISTRICT

Charlevoix County Will be Under New Apportionment

Of Congressional Districts Scott and Knox Probably Candidates

The new reapportionment bill, which had already passed the house, passed the senate Thursday and now goes to the president.

The bill provides for an increase of forty-two members, Michigan securing an increase of one and will have 13 representatives instead of 12, the present number.

The passing of the bill is of considerable interest to Charlevoix county as it will place us in a new congressional district when the new state reapportionment is made.

In all probabilities Governor Osborn will call a special session of the legislature next winter to reapportion the state and probably the northern part of the lower peninsula and the southern part of the upper peninsula will be placed in one district.

In anticipation of such a reapportionment Senator Scott and Frank Knox of the 5th will be candidates for the Republican nomination and probably others will enter the race.

In case a special session is not called then the extra representative will be elected by the state at large. The names of Mr. Knox, John Q. Ross, Patrick H. Kelly and ex-congressman Denby Dickema and Henry C. Smith are mentioned as probable candidates in case the state elects at large.

BAD RUNAWAY

Reuben Geer Seriously Injured in Runaway Saturday

Reuben Geer was seriously injured in a runaway accident on the Belvedere ground Saturday afternoon. Mr. Geer was unloading a load of gravel when his horses became frightened by an automobile. Mr. Geer, who was standing behind the horses, was thrown on the tongue and dragged quite a distance, when the team collided with an ice wagon, throwing him under the ice wagon, breaking several ribs and otherwise injuring him. An auto containing five young ladies was standing on the other side of the ice wagon and luckily escaped serious injuries.

Robbin's Circus a Good One.

The Robbin's circus which held forth here Wednesday, drew a mammoth crowd to town, the tent being filled at both afternoon and evening performances. Everybody seems to be well pleased with the performance given. The different performers being first-class and at the head of their profession. Robbin's circus will draw a big crowd when it comes again.

NEW SCHOOL LAWS

Enacted at the Last Session of the Legislature

Change in Time of Taking Census—Holidays are Cut Out

The Michigan state legislature enacted several new amendments to the school laws. One provides that no district shall receive more primary money until the amount of such money on hand is reduced so that it shall provide for teachers' wages for two years in advance. The money goes into the other districts having a smaller surplus or none.

The new primary law fund amendment goes into effect in 1912. The usual apportionment for the entire year made in May and November as usual, but in 1912 and thereafter, there will be one apportionment for the entire year, made from July 5 to 15. All the money can be collected for the whole year before the school opens. Some of the other laws are as follows:

The school census for 1912 will be taken 20 days before June 1, not the first Monday in June as is in vogue at the present time. The school commissioner shall appoint the county trustee officer instead of the sheriff. This officer has much power in looking after school buildings.

The commissioner has the authority to appoint a clerk with a salary of not more than $300 per year where there are more than 100 schools in the county.

On Columbus day, Memorial day, Lincoln's and Washington's Birthdays, school shall be kept and patriotic exercises held. None of them shall be holidays.

Funds shall be condensed to three: primary, library and general. There shall be a fourth fund known as the building fund.

Another school law that must be heeded reads: Previous to the first Monday in August in each year the board of education or the board of trustees, as the case may be, of each graded school district in this state shall cause to be published in a newspaper in said district or in such county in which district is located, such paper to be designated by board of education, a complete statement of the proceedings of the annual school meeting and a itemized financial statement of the receipts and expenditures of said districts during the preceding school year, the expense of said publication to be paid out of the general fund of the district."

GREAT POULTRY REGION

Says One of Leading Experts of the Grand Traverse Region

Ernest B. Blett, editor of Poultry Poultry, Kalamazoo, Michigan and formerly connected with the Graceland College, Lamora, Iowa, after a recent visit to the northern part of the western Michigan territory, announced the condition here are exceptionally favorable for the development of the poultry industry on a large scale.

He said that the sandy soil is much better for chicken raising than the heavier soils of other regions. Chickens are not liable to disease where there is good drainage as in the western Michigan country. He also called attention to the climate which is favorable to the development of this industry.

Another argument for poultry raising advanced by him was the nearness of the big consuming markets. As poultry raising and fruit growing are two industries that naturally go together, the one calling for the maximum of attention in the winter and the other in the summer, it is more than likely that the next few years will see a big development along poultry raising lines.

Fourth Annual Picnic.

Maple Grove grange will hold its fourth annual picnic Saturday, August 26, N. P. Hull, master of the Michigan state grange will deliver the principal address and the lecturer has prepared a good program. Horton Bay and Bay Shore will meet each other on the diamond and a full line of sports and horse races has been arranged. The day will close with a dance in the evening.

All losses are promptly paid in full by the insurance companies I represent, Myrtle Young.

INDIAN CAMP MEETING

Will be Held at Northport August Eleventh to Twentieth

The great Indian camp meeting will be held at Northport August 11 to 21 under the direction of the Methodist church. This meeting has become an annual event which draws people from all parts of the country who are interested in the welfare of the red men. An especially strong corps of preachers have been selected from both the white and Indian races and every day something special will be given in the services. Among those who will speak are Dr. Herbert Welsh, president of the Wesleyan university; Rev. N. L. Bray, presiding elder of this district; Rev. G. W. Plews of Traverse City; Rev. Chas. E. Thies of Northport; Rev. W. R. Snake of Ontario, Canada; Rev. Louis Medawis of Dor, Mich.; Rev. Samson Pigeon of Dunningville and Rev. Garnet Smith of Brimley. There will be several other Indian preachers on the grounds who will also speak during the meetings.

The day of big attractions will be on Sunday, August 21, when Dr. Herbert Welsh will preach a sermon by Rev. W. R. Snake, which will be interpreted in Indian by Rev. Samson Pigeon.

NEW OFFICERS

Are Appointed by East Jordan City Commission

Guy of East Jordan Now in Good Running Order

East Jordan's new city government is now in good running order, the commission having held several meetings. Below are the several appointments to the city offices:

City Clerk—O. J. Smith.
City Treasurer and Water Works Collector—C. C. Mack.
Attorney—Elisha N. Clink.
Chief of Police, Water Works and Street Superintendent—Henry Cook.
Fire Chief—Eugene Adams.
Health Officer—Dr. Frank P. Ramsey.

Mayor Cleveland has charge of the departments of finance and public health, Commissioner Henderson is in charge of the water works and public utilities, and Commissioner Kenny is in charge of streets and sewers.

A resolution was passed that it was the sense of the Commission that it was a public necessity that a policeman be appointed to protect property and maintain peace, such officer to receive no compensation except for actual services rendered. Thomas J. Smith was appointed policeman.

On motion, the salaries of the several city officers were fixed as follows: Clerk, $300; Treasurer, $300; Chief of Police, $300; Attorney, $100; Health Officer, $75; Chief of Fire Department, $50.

Obituary.

Frank Stonic, the little son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Stonic, died Saturday morning about seven o'clock after a short and severe illness of five days. He was taken very suddenly on Monday with cholera infantum. He was a brave, patient little sufferer and never murmured.

Frankie was born in Chicago August 16, 1907, and died in Marion August 5, 1911. Funeral services by Rev. Henry. The sympathy of the entire community is extended to the bereaved parents.

This suffering ended with the day. Yet lived to at its close. And breathed the long long night away to some like repose. But when the sun, in all his state, Shined the eastern skies, He passed through glory's morning gate And walked in Paradise.

CONVICT LABOR ON THE ROADS

Good Roads Earle Tells of Trip to Montana.

ATTENDED GOOD ROADS CONGRESS

System in Operation in That State Gives Good Results.

Prisoners Work Upon Their Honor and Few Attempts to Escape Made—Guarding Expenses Small.

Former State Good Roads Commissioner Earle has been out in Montana lately, where he addressed a good roads congress at Missoula city. He reports that Montana is working out the convict labor system by employing convicts at road building.

The attorney general, Albert J. Galen, who is a member of the board of prison commissioners, told, while ex-commissioner Earle was there, how the system works, in these words:

"In April last year the board made the order providing for the construction of public highways by the state's prisoners. The character of work already performed as well as the apparent benefit to the prisoners and to society, has convinced the board of the wisdom of its procedure. The cost of maintenance of the individual prisoner is not appreciably greater than the old method.

"At the present time we have 211 at work building roads under the trusty system, and it should give us more confidence in humanity when you realize that, as we have learned from experience, 60 prisoners can with safety and best results be housed at night in tents and so during both day and night handled and guarded with but three men. This one method requires but a minimum of additional expense in providing for the prisoners, the additional cost being merely in guard hire. The three men who act as guards are more in the nature of foremen or superintendents of the work and in no instance are such guards armed. Escapes have been no more numerous than under the old system.

"The prisoners are placed at work on their honor, and strict obedience to the rules is required; otherwise without any explanation or ceremony, the prisoner is at once denied all good time earned, placed in stripes and returned within the prison walls.

"This, of course, is looked upon as a distinct loss to the individual prisoner, and a severe punishment. They all appreciate fresh air, good food, opportunity to work and the privilege of being permitted to wear the cadet blue cloth than the stripes.

"It has been demonstrated that if one of the prison crew were to attempt to escape and thus interfere in any manner with the continuance of the trusty system, the prisoners themselves will aid the guard in making capture. The prisoners appear at all times to be fearful that something might occur to discontinue this system; and in consequence their work is well done and in compliance with the rules and regulations is cheerful and strictly obeyed.

"As an illustration of this I read in the daily press on Saturday last, of where a prisoner employed in a like character of work in Oregon had escaped and was recaptured, and stated as when asked why he had escaped: 'I wanted to see my old mother and that 20 years is a long time to wait.' His fellow prisoners, in a letter to the governor apologized for the man's act in so breaking his parole and begged of the governor not to discard the system without further trial.

"To see a prison crew at work in road building one would immediately get the impression that work was difficult to obtain and that such laborers were being paid five dollars a day and each man fearful that he would lose his job."

I guarantee our work on bicycle repairing and baby cab retiring at Benj. Brown.

Ask J. R. Cooper about the Gate bean harvesters—you'll need them soon now.

Neighborhood Notes

A third edition of the illustrated magazine, "Western Michigan Fruit with Flavor," is to be published this fall in time for the first Michigan Land & Apple Show to be held in Grand Rapids, November 7, 8, 9, 10 and 11. The magazine will consist of forty pages with a cover of three colors. The publication will be illustrated by an entirely new set of cuts, over a thousand photographs of western Michigan farm and orchard scenes having already been collected. From this large number of views enough extra fine scenes will be taken to tell the western Michigan story in pictorial form. The reading matter for the publication will also be new. The facts which are to form the backbone of the story are now being secured and arranged in logical form.

The magazine, like its predecessors will be a credit to its publishers and the region it advertises. Without question it will be instrumental in interesting thousands of people in this favored section.

According to information coming from railroad circles, the state board of equalization will find itself between two fires when it comes to raising the latter part of August to equalize the state.

It is stated that the mass of data which the railroads collected with great care last year to show that general property of the state is not assessed at cash value will be presented to the board with a demand that there be a stiff increase in the equalized value of numerous counties as a means of reducing the rate of taxation.

They cannot secure any interest which will affect the rate directly, but are expected to frighten many a supervisor into a nervous collapse by showing certain facts relative to values in his county when he comes in before the state board and insists that the state board should equalize the county at the figures of the supervisors.

The railroads are known to have specific instances at hand to show what they charge to be gross undervaluation in many counties of the lower peninsula.

That a man has no tax to pay on a recorded mortgage less than $100 under the new mortgage tax law is the interpretation of the new statute which went into effect August 1, made by Auditor General O. B. Fidler. The auditor general's opinion was given after he had conferred with Attorney General Kuhn.

Some doubt existed as to the exact meaning of the law. The section providing for the tax reads: "A tax of 5 cents for each $100 and each remaining fraction of the principal, debt, or obligation."

The auditor general and attorney general rule that this means no tax on a recorded mortgage of less than $100, and a tax of only 5 cents on a mortgage of $100. For a mortgage of $151, however, a tax of $1 must be paid, the same as for a $251 mortgage, the extra $51 above $100 being a "major fraction" of the latter in the meaning of the statute.

The big dam on the An Sable river, 10 feet high and 750 feet long, will be completed by January 1 next, and will produce a water power that will run three giant dynamos of 13,750 horse power that will send 110,000 electric volts to Bay City and Saginaw.

John H. Perry, a well known negro, died at the county home last week at the age of 89 years. He was one of the early settlers of Antrim county, coming here in 1852 with John Ois, who built the iron furnace now owned and operated by the Antrim Iron Co., near Manicella. He worked for Ois a number of years, afterward moving to a small farm on the east shore of Torch Lake in Forest Home township. Later he moved to Central Lake. He was an exceptionally intelligent man for one of his race and a good citizen in every respect. He is said to have been a soldier and a captain of a colored company in the civil war.—Manicella Herald.

A curious incident came to light at a meeting of the Charter township board last Saturday, that was brought about by a special meeting at the Johnson school district the previous Tuesday night. At the school meeting it developed that the district had not a single legal officer through neglect to qualify according to law, that provide such officers must take the oath of office before a justice of the peace or notary public. The curious fact is that other districts were found in the same condition of doing business without legal school directors. A special meeting of the township board was held on Monday to make new appointments in the several instances and to have such new officers sworn in according to law.—Manicella Herald.

Deafness Cannot be Cured by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian tube. When this tube is inflamed, you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever. True cases, out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of deafness caused by Catarrh that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars free.

PROLOGUE.

You're not so sure about Jimmy Valentine as you might be—until the very last chapter, when he "finds himself" in a scene that is as cleverly conceived as anything ever presented in American fiction or drama: What you are sure of as you read—very, very sure, in fact—is that you are following the story of a most interesting character, one whose doings on the stage have held the interest of many thousands. Jimmy Valentine becomes a "crook," with most of the failings and weaknesses of a man who doesn't recognize the difference between mine and thine, but he winds up as a well-read story and he finds out for yourself how he winds up. It will be worth your while, for this absorbing, thrilling romance of both the under world and the upper world as well proves that a man has never sunk so low but that he may again regain the honor he has thrust aside, when the true spirit of manhood throbs within him.

[The Armstrong drama, of which the following is the novelized version, is based on O. Henry's story, "A Retrieved Reformation."]

CHAPTER I.

THE warden's office in Sing Sing prison is not a pleasant spot in which to linger, whether you may be innocent or whether guilty of a crime. And no more reassuring could be termed the abrupt, dominating personage who presided over the dismal destinies of the office and institution when occurred the events chronicled in this narrative. That a man fated by his choice of occupation to daily associate intimately with criminals of high and low degree and to come constantly in personal contact with all the misery and depravity going to form the life of a state's prison—that a man so fated should find exquisite enjoyment in accentuating these depressing conditions is surely a contradiction of what ordinarily would be expected. Humans of normal mold are generally occupied in ameliorating the evils and annoyances of their surroundings. That is nature's way. Not so with Warden Handler. That which is had can be made to be worse. Innocence can be shown to be guilt—with the aid of twisted weaknesses. Repentance is always insincere, and if it is not it can be made so. A murderer should be made to remember always his ignominy. A thief should be reminded of his amateurish clumsiness which led him into the clutches of the central office men. That was Handler's philosophy. That was Handler's way. And underlying all his petty oppression and gross inhumanity was a cause, deep rooted in a system of his own and of a race of jail keepers that went before him. Exposure? Removal? Bah! He had considered all that. And if worse came to worse, had he not friends in the state senate? Was there not a governor who would need his assistance in the state convention when it came to a question of delegates? Clearly the possibility of removal was the least of his worries. Warden Handler sat at his polished oak desk in the middle of his office. At his left was another desk used by Smith, his secretary. At his back the curtain windows looked out into the prison yard, where it prescribed in terms of games of croquet were allowed to take a brief outing to breathe in the air from the hills that mocked them, thus to prolong the lives of those who hoped to live as well as of those who hoped to die, thus to strengthen the nerves of the unfortunate whom justice had decreed must some day in surprise go to a shadowy little stone room to sit in a shifter wooden chair equipped with stout straps and electric wires. The warden was in his customary pessimistic mood. Good reason for it this time, too, for "Chicago Whitey," a trusty, doing a "bit" of seven years, had got through the guards and dropped over the wall on to the top of a car of an "up bound" freight train the evening before. Not a trace of him yet. Handler's pride in his record as a pen master was at stake, and he blamed himself and the whole universe for the official explanations which must soon be forthcoming. His dark eyes gleamed venomously; his short cropped black hair fairly bristled with the rage that surged in the thick skull beneath it; his strong, square jaws were grimly set, though now and again his upper lip would curl slightly back as he gritted his teeth, revealing a row of tobacco stained fangs. Yes, Warden Handler was disturbed. He fingered a glistering letter opener impatiently, and his lips seemed to move. "Serves me right for makin' a 'trusty' out of a bloomin' yegg," he muttered. "Might have known one of them wouldn't stay put in one place any length of time, not even in a collar." The door at Handler's right opened. He half turned and glowered at a trusty who shuffled in, carrying a bottle of drinking water. "It's pretty soft for you around here, eh?" grunted the warden. The convict hastened to place the bottle in the holder at the sound of the official's voice. He then hurried toward the door, mumbling a faint "Yes, sir," as he went. "Suppose he'll be tryin' the west wall next," commented Handler, pounding his fist on the desk. "But I'll trim 'em all yet, I'll be!" "A visitor for you," announced his secretary, Smith, entering. "His name is like a roll call in the German navy." He handed Handler a card. The warden took the postcard. "Black end-of-fun-bunch," he read slowly. "A man with a name like that has no right on the outside of a prison. What's his graft?" "He has a letter from the state board of prisons," he read, glanced a look, I believe, at— "Let's have him." The secretary ushered in an earnest looking man with long, wavy black hair. He was short and thin. "I am Gustave Hildebrandt, the great inventor," said the visitor to the warden. "I have a lock for you to keep the prisoners out." He bowed to the warden and rubbed his hands complacently. "So I hear. Your lock can't be picked, eh?"

The inventor raised his hands in horror at the suggestion. "Picked? Picked?" he ejaculated. "My lock picked? The whole world it has tried it—Germany, France, England—and even the cleverest thieves in Naples. The whole wide world it all it has not open without they the key has."

"So I've heard, but still it might be picked at that."

"It is maybe I don't understand picked—you mean open with my key?"

"Yes, with a wire or—"

"A wire?" exclaimed the inventor. "My lock opens that I have spent fourteen years in perfecting. Nephew it is laughable, yes, but—"

Handler was growing impatient. "It will be accepted only on the condition that it cannot be opened without a key," he pronounced.

The inventor threw himself up proudly. "Yaw, and I challenge the world," he cried confidently.

"Well, all the world's champions are in America, you know," answered the warden, "and when it comes to genius in mechanics most of them are in jail. We'll have it tried before noon."

The visitor took his precious lock from his pocket and laid it on the table in front of the warden, saying: "I keep the key. Now the world cannot my lock open."

"It looks good," commented Handler. "If you care to wait I'll have it tested."

"I wait. I hope to see the expert frown and smile and give it up. It is my joy."

As the inventor went out to await the test George Doyle, a detective credited with a long list of important captures, entered the office and saluted Handler.

"Isn't Bill Avery to be let loose today?" queried the newcomer.

"Don't know. Is he?" returned the warden indifferently.

Doyle gazed at the other significantly. "Yes," he said. "I hear he's very friendly with Jimmy Valentine. The way Valentine's lawyer is going after a new trial makes things look dangerous."

"What about the man you had make friends with Valentine in order to get him to talk about himself to give himself away?" the warden asked shrewdly.

Doyle shrugged. "Nothing to it. Valentine wouldn't get confidential with him, but if I could get Avery on my staff to work for me and snoop on Valentine I'd get him. I'd be able to keep him from getting a new trial."

Thus did the detective describe in his conversation a small part of the system which his fellow man hunters find of utility in serving their particular ends, whatever they may be—the "stool pigeon" system, which consists of forcing or persuading released criminals to spy on their companions and to convey to the police the information they procure.

Sometimes the detective uses the knowledge so gained for the purpose of arresting a fugitive, again for securing a division of ill-gotten spoils, again for the purpose of obtaining witnesses who will hold it policy to commit perjury at a trial, and so the underworld grows suspicious of his neighbors and finds danger lurking where friendships' smiles is sought.

The warden resumed the conversation. "I don't know about Avery's release," he said. "Oh, Smith," turning to his assistant, "where's the list?"

"On your desk."

"Oh, yes. Avery here?"

"He's waiting outside."

"Let's have him."

"He's a tough old boy, this Avery," commented Doyle, "but he's my one best chance in trying to get the goods on Valentine."

The secretary brought in Bill Avery.

whose gray hair, shaven face and stooping figure indicated that prison fare was not rejuvenating, although there was a strange sharpness in his eyes, in his glance, that a long career of further watchfulness had developed.

"You're finally out, eh?" greeted the prison master. "You've done well?"

"Eight years ten months, sir."

"Treated pretty well, weren't you?"

Avery gazed intently at Smith, then he replied to his questioner: "You've never heard me complain, have you?"

"No, and it wouldn't have got you much."

"I saw that the first day in."

"Well, now what? Going to turn square?" Handler sneered as he spoke. The released convict looked the warden squarely in the eyes.

"You know I am, sir."

Handler laughed heartily. "I know they all say so. Oh, here's an old friend of yours, Avery." The speaker pointed to Doyle.

"I don't remember him," replied the old man after a searching suspicious inspection of the detective.

"You don't remember me—eh, Bill?" Doyle laughed.

Avery suddenly exclaimed: "I got you now. You're Doyle—still a copper?"

"Still a copper, Bill."

"You ain't got anything on me to hold over me when I get out."

"That's true, Bill. Anyway, this

"I'm your friend," said the detective in earnest manner. Avery threw his head back. "My friend?" he exclaimed in astonishment. The warden could barely suppress a grin. "Yes; I think I know where I can get you a pretty good job," went on Doyle engagingly. "Nobody wants me," said Avery despondently. "I think I can arrange it." "A job in a laundry, eh?" snapped the ex-prisoner. "I've been a washwoman here."

"There are lots of jobs where you don't have to know a trade. Can't Bill get down, warden?" "Why, certainly," responded Handler. Avery, vouching his thanks, seated himself at the warden's table. Doyle came close to the old man. "There's one thing you want to do, Bill, above everything else—keep out of bad company," he warned. Avery hesitated. He glanced from the detective across to the warden. "I'm getting out of bad company today," he replied, briefly. Doyle started forward. "Yes, and it's a good thing you are, for you're getting away from Valentine."

"Valentine?"

"Yes," insisted Doyle. "It doesn't

COMMON COUNCIL

Council Chambers, Aug. 8, 1911.
The Common Council for the City of Charlevoix met on the above date, Mayor Hampton, presiding.
Aldermen present: Swinton, Glassford, Rachow and Geiken.
Minutes of the last meeting read and approved.

Moved by Ald. Rachow and seconded by Ald. Glassford that the Mayor's appointment of William O'Neil as a member of the special police force be confirmed. Motion carried.

Enter Ald. Nordrum and Ald. Webster.

It being necessary for Ald. Swinton to leave town he was excused by the Mayor.

Moved and seconded that the street committee be authorized to connect several of the catch basins in the city with the sewer and that the street commissioner be directed to proceed with the work. Motion carried.

Moved by Ald. Nordrum and seconded by Ald. Rachow that the matter of purchasing fire hose for the city be left in the hands of the committee on Fire and Prevention with power to act in conjunction with the purchasing committee. Motion carried.

To the Mayor and Council of the City of Charlevoix.

A meeting of the property owners of Dixon Ave. and that portion of Michigan Ave. south of Dixon Ave. was held at the high school room, Friday evening, August 4, 1911.

Meeting was called to order by A. E. Bridge, chairman. F. H. Wilkinson was elected chairman.

The various paying bids and specifications were read and explained by the Mayor and the chairman of the street committee.

After a discussion of the relative merits of the different kinds of paving presented in the different bids, a rising vote of 13 to 1, decided for a concrete pavement.

A further vote unanimously favored awarding the contract to Mr. Ler Howard.

Respectfully submitted,
F. H. WILKINSON,
Chairman,
Charlevoix, Michigan, August 8, 1911.

FINAL REPORT

To the Honorable Mayor and Common Council, City of Charlevoix.

We, the undersigned, members of the Paving Improvement Committee appointed by your honorable body on May 15, 1911 and which submitted our preliminary report on June 20th, beg leave to hereby submit our final report as follows:

After having examined various paving materials, reported into their wearing qualities, durability and desirability we have concluded that material of concrete properly constructed, will give the best and most service of anything in our opinion, we have examined.

Concrete improperly mixed or made weak by insufficient cement or cement of a poor quality, will give poor results. By a concrete street properly constructed, we might such as there is a sample of at the south end of Bridge St. and such as Lee Howard, Charlevoix, Mich., has laid upon and others to construct. While there is a bid offered on this material somewhat cheaper, we believe that the city will get just what we pay for, and we believe the bid of Mr. Howard is the best work and good material will warrant, and considering that his bid on curbs and gutter will offset a portion of the difference on the bid on paving, and the fact that his work done for our city has proven satisfactory heretofore and believing that in justice to all taxpayers and citizens we should construct a street that will be a street in years to come we recommend the propriety of the bid as put in by Mr. Howard for a concrete street.

Respectfully submitted,
W. J. KACROW,
Ald. Webster,
J. J. GEIKEN.

To the Honorable Mayor and Common Council, City of Charlevoix, Michigan.

Having examined paving material in Chicago and other cities and especially Alpena, Mich., I beg to concur in the above report and recommend its adoption.

CHAS. NORDRUM.

Moved by Ald. Nordrum and seconded by Ald. Rachow that the property owners report and the report of the Special Committee on Paving be received and placed on file. Motion carried.

Petitions were presented by property owners on Michigan and Dixon Ave., and the taxpayers throughout the city asking that concrete be used as the paving for the above streets and requesting the acceptance of the Ler Howard bid for the construction of the same. Moved and seconded that the petitions be received and placed on file. Motion carried.

Moved by Ald. Rachow and seconded by Ald. Webster that in considering the minutes of the property owners meeting and the report of the special committee on the investigation of paving materials that it is the sense of the council to decide upon concrete as the paving for Michigan and Dixon Aves. Motion carried by the following vote:

Ayes, Glassford, Nordrum, Rachow and Webster.

Nays, Geiken.

D. C. Nettleton and several other property owners of the North side appeared before the council with objections to the proposed closing of Prospect St.

Moved by Ald. Geiken and seconded by Ald. Webster that the proposed closing of Prospect St. be indefinitely postponed. Motion carried.

Moved by Ald. Glassford and seconded by Ald. Webster that the certified checks accompanying the paving bids be returned to the bidders with the exception of the one accompanying the Howard bid. Motion carried.

Moved by Ald. Nordrum and seconded by Ald. Glassford that the Street committee be directed to prepare plans, diagrams, specifications and estimates of cost for the paving of Michigan and Dixon Aves. and to make a report at their earliest convenience. Motion carried.

There being no further business the Council adjourned.

CHARLEVOIX, MICHIGAN

"Alias Jimmy Valentine"

Novelized by
FREDERICK R. TOOMBS
From the Great
Play by
PAUL ARMSTRONG

"You may find it hard to know a man like that. I suppose you know he killed Cotton so he wouldn't have to divide the swag with him." The other shook his head decisively.

"I don't know anything about it." The detective now spoke sharply. "And what's he got against you? He sent out word that—the questioner suddenly shifted—"what message did he give you to take out to—to?"

Avery drew back involuntarily. "He didn't give me any message," he cried out in positive tones.

Then both the officials noticed that the ex-convict's eyes slowly drooped and became directed to the floor.

"I could do you a good turn—if you trailed along with me," suggested the detective.

The released criminal brushed aside the invitation. He rose stiffly from his chair.

"I'm on to you, Doyle. If you're to be my friend I know that I've got to be a stool pigeon, eh? Well, I'm old, and I don't know where I'm goin' when I leave here. But I'll take the river out there," pointing over his shoulder with his thumb, "for mine before I play that game. I tell you—the old man's voice rose to an indignant pitch—"It's only fly guys like you, Doyle, that's too lazy or too ignorant to do their work themselves that has to have stool pigeons on your staff to do your work for you. Why, you couldn't run a twelve-year-old ship if you didn't have some poor nerve broken sucker of a stool to go out ahead and make the job easy for you."

Both Doyle and the warden, enraged at the old man, lunged viciously at him to wreak vengeance upon him for his denunciation.

CHAPTER II.

WITH an agility surprisingly in contrast with his former decrepit attitude, the intended victim seized his chair and raised it threateningly over his head. The two officers halted. Doyle, regarding a calm demeanor, through the excellent self control which had become one of his valuable assets in his business, spoke easily.

"So you don't want a friend, old fellow?"

Avery lowered the chair.

"No," he snorted, "not any friends that are coppers. Thieves are bad enough."

The point of the reply did not escape Doyle.

"Well," he responded angrily, "you have got me for an enemy all the rest of your worthless life. You'd better come to see me once a month for fear I grab you by mistake—on suspicion."

"To — with you!" snarled Avery, turning away and facing the warden. "I've got the regular state allowances for released prisoners comin' to me, ain't it?"

"Yes," answered Haudler, "and you take it and get out of here, you crook! Here, sign this" (he showed him a paper, "if you can write. If you can't, why, make your mark." The warden handed over a bill.

The departing man scanned the greenback deprecatingly.

"Five dollars," he cried, "and this suit of clothes that a country constable could see the Sing Sing tag on in the night! Pretty good for eight years and ten months' work, eh? And you guys are my friends! For God's sake, let me get out of here, where there are men who don't live on the mistakes of some one else." He wheeled toward the door and disappeared.

"There's one more we've got to keep track of," commented Doyle.

"He'll be at work in a week," said Haudler laconically.

"Yes, and I'll nail him and give him back to you," the warden put in hastily.

"I just might make it tough for him if he was sent back. I thought he had come to his senses and would help you against Valentine, but he's just a plain fool."

"And all alike—all blaming us for their fall." The detective seated himself as he spoke. "He can't work now; he's too old. The game as he knew it, was the yegg game."

Haudler also had resumed his seat, and he leaned over his desk and said significantly: "So you're afraid Valentine will get a new trial, eh? There's some class to Valentine. Have a smoke." The prison master held out a box of perfectos, from which Doyle gratefully extracted a weed.

"Thanks," mumbled the detective. "This Valentine is the only high class crook I ever knew that I couldn't reach and put away for keeps. There's something of a mystery about him. He'd get away with the battles came in high society in a walk. The swell dames would go flirty over his good looks and his tony manners and his pleasing voice. Yet he has trailed MRS. WEBSTER AND MRS. MOORE OF THE GATE OF HOPE SOCIETY along with the toughest gang in the business." Doyle paused, then said, "And yet he says he is innocent. I suppose."

"Yes," put in Haudler, leaning comfortably in his chair. "Said so last time I talked with him. This prison is killing him. He doesn't like it. He can't stand it. His nerves will stick out through his skin if they jump much more."

"He's the one fellow I think this life would cure. He's a wonder."

"At times, you mean," was Haudler's sarcastic rejoinder.

Little did the warden and the detective realize as they sat and schemed to bring about the further and complete ruin of Jimmy Valentine that "there's a divinity that shapes our ends, rough hew them how we will," and this influence is not denied to those who languish forlorn and hopeless in prison cells.

Little did they know that it might be Jimmy Valentine, No. 1289, who was to teach them that the soul of a man is an invulnerable spark that not even years of oppression and degradation can lastingly dim when the spirit wills that they shall not.

And just now there came a knocking at the warden's door that portended much for No. 1289.

The warden's secretary went to the door opening from the office into a waiting room where visitors were received. He returned to announce, "Some members of the Gate of Hope society, and they have the lieutenant governor and his niece with them."

"The lieutenant governor?" ejaculated Haudler. "Fay?"

"Yes."

"What's the Gate of Hope?" asked Doyle.

"A gang of women tryin' to release from prison convicts they believe are innocent," said the warden.

The detective smiled.

At Haudler's order Smith summoned the callers, Doyle making his exit. "The lieutenant governor," pondered Haudler. "I wonder if there's any look about those contracts for supplies."

Mrs. Moore and Mrs. Webster of the society, middle aged women of pleasing appearance, came in, followed by Rose Lane, the lieutenant governor's niece, and that official himself. Miss Lane, a young girl of unmistakable charm and beauty, held close to her uncle's side.

"Mr. Haudler," spoke Mrs. Webster, "we come today with a famous humanitarian, Lieutenant Governor Fay," she pronounced, inclining toward that official.

"Governor," said the warden, bowing. The lieutenant governor shook Haudler's hand and presented his niece. The party seated themselves, facing the warden.

"We have come here today," said Mrs. Moore, "to again ask that men be not forced to make confessions while imprisoned here that may be used against them when they leave here. We understand that through the pressure that can be brought to bear on the inmates in these institutions they can be made willing to confess to crimes they never committed."

"What do you mean?" queried Haudler.

"Oh, we understand that by depriving prisoners of their proper allowance of food and of small privileges they are allowed, and by bullying conduct on the part of the men in charge of them the inmates can be led to make false confessions involving themselves or others. This information is used against the men after they are released as well as against men who are at large whom the police desire to incriminate."

"No one is ever forced to confess anything here, madam," protested Haudler.

"But I know!"

"Pardon me, Mrs. Moore,"—interrupted the lieutenant governor, rising. "I do not think that in your zeal you realize what you are saying." He addressed the warden. "It seems, however, that these well meaning ladies have evidence that a certain man here did confess some offense to a—"

"To a stool," commented Haudler.

"Am I responsible for the detectives who have men working inside the prison for them?"

"By a stool you mean?"

"A stool pigeon, a decoy. They win the confidence of prisoners and tell what they learn to the detectives."

Mrs. Moore here went on to state that in Sing Sing and in all prisons were confined many innocent men and that in any event released men should be encouraged to live honestly, should be given a chance. They ought not to be pursued and hounded into being spies by detectives anxious to make a record for securing convictions regardless of the truth of the testimony. One reason the women advanced for her kind was that a man who became a spy or decoy must associate continually with men and women of questionable character, thus rendering it impossible to secure or much less remain in honest employment.

"Bosh!" exclaimed Haudler as she ceased. "These folks we got don't want to live straight, won't live straight, can't live straight when they get on the outside. First, they're all lazy; second, most of them are insane."

"What would you call a unit," continued the warden, "who does some—" thing the law forbids, does it whenever the opportunity offers without a chance of gain?—What do you call a man who does a thing for the love of it?"

LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR FAY WAS ANNOUNCED.

"An artist," answered Mrs. Webster.

"Artist! Then I've got a lot of them," laughed Haudler sarcastically.

"Well, to me they are insane."

To Rose Lane the adventure was extremely interesting. Finally succeeding in gaining her uncle's consent to her accompanying him on a visit to the great prison, she was now seeing a little section of the darker side of life which appealed strongly to her imaginative nature. Her cheeks flushed with the excitement of the occasion, this young girl to this famous tomb of living dead men.

As the warden finished she exclaimed, "I once had an experience with a burglar, and—"

"Did he take your jewels?" asked Mrs. Moore sympathetically.

"No. I was in the parlor car in daylight. I was the only person in the car, and this man walked up and accosted me. I reached for the bell for the porter. He struck my wrist. Then he sat on the arm of my chair. He wanted to talk to me, he said. I scarcely knew what to do when a younger man, evidently a gentleman, walked in from the smoking compartment and, taking the man by the arm, led him away."

"How do you know the man was a burglar?" asked the lieutenant governor.

"Listen. I had no more than got my breath when the man came back. He threw his arms about my shoulders and again sat on the chair arm. When I reached for the bell he struck my arm. I screamed. The gentleman who had taken him away before ran into the car, and they fought. I was petrified with fright. The gentleman was much the smaller, and it seemed he would surely be killed when suddenly by some trick he sent the man crashing through the Pullman window. I read in the paper the next day that a famous burglar was found with his skull fractured near the tracks."

A strange light came into Haudler's eyes. Was it possible, he thought, that so strange a coincidence—

"Did that occur in this state?" he asked quickly.

"Yes," between Buffalo and Rochester two years ago in June."

The warden compressed his lips firmly.

"Was the dead burglar's name Cotton?" he interrogated earnestly.

"Yes; that's what the papers said. Did you know him?"

"Had him here for five years once. Odd, but we heard he was killed trying to get on a moving train. And, by the way, his particular pal is now in this prison doing ten—safe breaking. His name is Valentine. The story you tell is a brand new one on us."

"And you never saw again the gentleman who rescued you?" queried Mrs. Moore of Miss Lane.

SPECIAL SESSION URGED

To Take up the Initiative, Referendum and Recall

Letters have been received by a large number of men who are interested in better government inviting them to attend a meeting to be held at Lansing at a convenient date not yet fixed and to urge upon the governor the calling of a special session of the legislature at which the initiative, referendum and recall measures shall be taken up for consideration and if possible passed. It is urged that the bill shall fix 25 per cent of the voters to make possible recall, 8 per cent of the initiative and 5 per cent for the referendum.

The movement is state wide, similar letters being sent out all over the commonwealth in an effort to force through these measures at the earliest moment, not waiting for the regular session a year from next January.

BUSINESS STILL GROWING

Orlowski & Son are Located in Their New Store Building

L. S. Orlowski and wife have returned from their wedding trip through the west and Mr. Orlowski is busily getting things settled in the new store building that Orlowski & Son have erected this season. This firm has enjoyed a steady growth since its establishment, nearly every other year being forced to increase its floor space to take care of their growing trade. The new building is a one story brick 48x90, with 3,000 feet of floor space and has metal ceilings. An elevator runs to the basement where they have an additional floor space of 3,000 feet. The new building will be devoted to their wholesale and retail trade while the old building will be devoted to the grain and seed business which has grown to large proportions in the past few years.

CHARLEVOIX THE MECCA

Michigan Postmasters Will Gather Here August 29-31

Both Senators and Most of the Michigan Representatives Will be Present

Preparations are being rapidly pushed forward for the annual meeting of the Michigan Postmasters' Association in this city, August 29-31.

Secretary Hopkins, of the Association, is sending out letters to the members urging them to attend. It is the intention of the postmasters in the southern part of the state to make the trip by boat from Detroit to Mackinac Island and from there here by special train. Special rates have also been arranged for those who come by rail and hundreds are coming.

The postoffice department will be well represented at the meeting. Both Senator Smith and Senator Townsend will be present as well as most of the Representatives from this state and when the members are not busy the citizens of Charlevoix are going to give them all kinds of entertainment. The officers of the association are: President, Homer Warren, Detroit; Secretary-Treasurer, H. A. Hopkins, St. Clair; Vice President, H. B. Colman, Kalamazoo; Executive Committee, A. L. Fitch, Charlevoix; Fred C. Wheeler, Salem; Grant Morse, Portland; Dan P. McMullen, Cheboygan; Burt D. Cady, Port Huron; F. G. Ely, Davisburg; M. S. Curtis, Battle Creek; W. N. Lister, Ypsilanti; J. C. Ketchum, Hastings; John D. Manigum, Marquette; J. C. Richardson, Jackson; George L. Link, Bay City; Fred A. Hutt, Grand Haven; M. N. Brady, Saginaw; West Side; P. P. Schnorbach, Muskegon.

AUTO LIGHT LAW

Here is the Full Text of the Michigan Measure Now in Force

"Every motor vehicle operated and driven upon the public highways of this state shall, during the period from one hour after sunset to one hour before sunrise, display at least two lighted lamps on the front and one on the rear of such vehicle, which shall also display a red light visible from the rear. The white rays of such rear lamp shall shine upon the number plate carried on the rear of such vehicle. The light of the front lamps shall be visible at least 200 feet in the direction the motor vehicle is proceeding."

It was the contention of the police chief, upon the information the patrolmen claimed he had given them, that the rays of the lighted lamps had to shine that distance ahead of the auto. In cities the headlights do not have to be burning according to the law, but it is necessary to have the lights burning on the autos that are visible to approaching vehicles or pedestrians for a distance of 200 feet.

On side streets and darkened thoroughfares it is to the advantage to the autoist as well as to the safety of the pedestrian and others that the headlights should be burning and to this end the police will exert themselves.

HOW THE LAKE HELPS

Prevents Winter-Killing and Holds Back the Buds

Government Engineers are Engaged in Making an Investigation

The influence or effect of Lake Michigan on the peach crops along its eastern shore is the subject of quite spirited discussions among fruit growers. Interest has been intensified by the announcement that government engineers are making an investigation with a view of ascertaining the effect of the Chicago drainage canal on the temperature of water in the southern part of the lake. Most of those who express opinions on the subject contend that peaches thrive on the eastern shore of Lake Michigan because, with prevailing winds from the west or southwest, the water in the lake warms the air and keeps the temperature in the fruit belt several degrees higher than it would be without the influence of the lake. They point to the daily weather reports to prove that the average temperature at Grand Haven is considerably warmer than at Chicago or Milwaukee and declare that without the influence of the lake the winter temperature of western Michigan would average as low or lower than that of northern Illinois and Wisconsin.

Other observers contend that the lake benefits the peaches not so much by making it warmer in the winter as it does by making it cooler in the spring. They admit that the lake frequently saves trees in the fruit belt from being winter killed, but declare that the greater benefit comes from the coolness in the spring which retards the swelling of the buds until danger from frost has passed.

When the conflicting opinions were "put up" to Robert D. Graham, who is recognized as an expert on "peachology," he said: "Both are right to a large extent. There is no doubt that the lake exerts a great influence on the climate of the western part of the state—it makes it warmer in winter and colder in the spring and summer. The influence is greatest near the lake shore, but it extends inland perhaps twenty or thirty miles. The effect is not felt on the other side of the lake because the winds do not blow that way."

"The lake acts as an equalizer. Water cannot freeze without parting with a part of its heat. Lake Michigan gives off heat even in the winter time and as the water is colder than the air above it cools the atmosphere in spring and summer. You can easily prove that water, even when near the freezing point, gives off heat, by placing a tubful in the cellar where your potatoes are in danger of freezing. You will find that in a cellar, where potatoes freeze when the temperature outside goes down to zero will be practically frost-proof after you have placed a tubful of water on the bottom."

"It is undoubtedly true that the lake frequently saves the peach crop by retarding the opening of buds. However, a crop destroyed by a spring frost is much less serious than a freeze in winter that kills the trees. An orchard with every peach killed in the spring winter-killed are a complete loss. It seems to me the greater benefit derived from the lake is the prevention of the extreme cold that kills the trees. The influence of the lake is not always sufficient to keep the temperature above the killing point and there is certainly good reason to fear that lowering the temperature of the lake even a few degrees would bring the 'cold spells' more frequently."

IMPORTANT CHANGES

Made in the Law Relative to Hunting Deer and Birds

Season Lasts Forty-Five Days—License Good for Twenty-Five

The following important changes in the game laws made by the legislature last winter will be of interest to our readers:

Section 16. No person or persons shall molest, harass or annoy, or break, train or practice any dog upon any game birds during their respective closed season: Provided, That it shall be lawful to train or practice dogs upon game birds for fifteen days next preceding the opening of the season for hunting ruffed grouse in each year. It shall be unlawful, however, for any person while so training dogs to have in possession any firearms.

Section 17. No person shall take kill or capture in one day more than the following of any of the game birds mentioned in this act: Quail, ten; partridge (ruffed grouse) and spruce hens, six; plover, ten; woodcock, six; snipe and other shore birds, ten; geese brant and ducks, 25. No person shall at any time have in possession more than the following number of any of the game birds mentioned in this act: Quail, 15; partridge (ruffed grouse) and spruce hens 15 in all; plover, 20; woodcock, 20; snipe and other shore birds, 20 in all; geese, brant and ducks, 25 in all. No person shall kill in any calendar year more than 50 of any one kind of the following named game birds, to-wit: Quail, partridge (ruffed grouse), spruce hen, plover, woodcock, snipe and shore birds. No person shall during the open season of any calendar year take, kill or capture more than two deer.

Section 18. The following named game animals and game birds may be hunted and killed as herein provided during the periods named, which shall be the open seasons: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed so as to permit the hunting or killing of deer during the open season for a longer period than 25 days from the date of issuance of the hunter's license: Deer, October 15 to November 30, both inclusive; fox, gray and black squirrels, October 15 to November 31, both inclusive; rabbits, October 15 to March 1, both inclusive; quail, October 15 to November 30, both inclusive; ruffed grouse, October 15 to November 30, both inclusive; spruce hens, October 15 to November 30, both inclusive; ducks, snipe, plover, woodcock, shore birds, rails and coots, October 15 to December 31, both inclusive; geese and brant, October 15 to December 31, both inclusive: Provided, however, That fox, black and gray squirrels shall not be limited or killed until 1911: Provided further, That Mongolian or English pheasant, black fowl, capercaillie, hazel grouse and wild turkey shall not be hunted or killed until the year 1915 and then only at the time, in the manner and for the purpose authorized by law: Provided however, That in addition to the open season for wild fowl shooting, hereinafter in this section established, it shall be lawful to hunt and kill blue bills, canvas back, red head, widgeon, pin-tails, whistlers, spoon-bills, butter-ball, and saw-bill ducks, between the second day of March and the tenth day of April, both inclusive in each year: Provided, further, That it shall be lawful to hunt and kill teal and mallard ducks from September 15 to December 31.

THEATRICAL

Tuesday evening the theater goes filled the Charlevoix Theater to its capacity when "A Pair of Country Kids" was produced by a fair company of performers. There were many good features of the acting, and many weak points. The Charlevoix people have the displeasing annoyance here every summer of some of the young resort colony trying to break up a show. Tuesday evening the disturbance was again in vogue and the party of four people were warned by the manager of the company to stop hissing and to behave themselves which they failed to do, and the manager called for an officer to remove the parties from the box. The officer, however, failed to be present. Each year the citizens of our city have had to put up with disturbances of this character. The plays produced here each year suit the people of Charlevoix, to the extent of the price of admission asked, and if these few summer people, who probably, while in their home towns, pay from $3.00 to $5.00 admission to plays wholly beyond their mental capacity, and who undoubtedly attend, more for being able to tell their friends they were present, than the benefit they receive, or their capability of grasping the merest meaning of the play, will exercise common sense enough to wait until they return to their native haunts, where, we may rest assured, they will conduct themselves as ladies and gentlemen, it will be a great relief to our home theater-goers. This nuisance must be abated and good order must be maintained either by common decency or by force. The home people pay their money to see the show and not the "pranks" of the individual, would be disturbers.

The Majestic theater is producing some good motion pictures and vaudeville. This week a team of tambourine jugglers are furnishing a neat act that is very pleasing to people who like this class of performing. Under the present management the theater is trying to be maintained as a clean and wholesome place for ladies and children to go for an evening's enjoyment.

WILL RAISE TROUT

New Industry Has Been Established at Ewart

F. S. Postal, brother of Fred Postal of the Griswold house, Detroit, is engaged in a new industry at Ewart, that of raising brook trout for the commercial trade. A gentleman interested says:

"Private preserves are in no way affected by the game laws and we can 'catch on' fish at anytime we want to. We already have several ponds of from moderate size to two or three acres. A part of the plant will be a complete fish hatchery where we will preserve our own spawn for planting in the spring. We plan next year to raise and ship at least 20 tons of brook trout. It sells at a dollar a pound, and there is a first class market for it. In fact, the big cafes and hotels have a hard time getting it. We have already letters from a number of hotels agreeing to take almost as much of it as we want to ship. Twenty tons of trout ought to be worth $10,000."

KILLED BY LIVE WIRE

DeWitt Keenholts of East Jordan Electrocuted

Had Been a Resident of that City for Several Years

Monday afternoon our people were shocked to hear that Mr. DeWitt Keenholts, one of our most respected citizens was dead, having been electrocuted by accidentally touching a "live" wire while working at the plant of the East Jordan Co-operative Co.

The Co-operative Co. some time ago put in a large dynamo and are supplying the current for the Electric Light & Power Co. and the main conducting wires run over the roof of the building which they cleared about four feet. These being outside wires were not covered.

Mr. Keenholts was a stationary engineer, and that afternoon was working at pipe fitting, and had occasion to go on the roof for some work. It was just after the rain and everything was wet and by some mischance one of the wires hit his arm and the current was short-circuited to the wet roof with fatal results.

Mr. Keenholts has lived here on the west side for many years, and was quiet and industrious and was highly esteemed by all. He was in his 60th year and leaves wife and two daughters—one married to Commissioner J. H. Milford and the other a teacher in our school. The funeral will be held at 10 o'clock tomorrow forenoon, at the home, and will be in charge of the Masonic fraternity of which he was a member.

Mr. Keenholts was a native of New York, and his father and one brother were killed in the civil war. Three sisters and a brother survive him.—Enterprise.

RADICAL CHANGE IN TAXATION

Is the New System of Taxing Mortgages

WHICH TOOK EFFECT AUGUST FIRST

By January 1 Will be in Full Operation

Taxes May Still Continue to be Paid Under the General Law—List of Exemptions

"Section eight provides in substance that no mortgage or land contract which is subject to the tax imposed by this act, shall be released, enforced, discharged or record, or received in evidence in any action or proceeding at law or in equity; nor shall any assignment of any mortgage be recorded until the tax imposed by this act shall have been paid.

"As to mortgages already recorded, or which may be recorded before January 1, 1912, this section will not apply, unless the affidavit provided for in Section six is filed by the owner, and the tax paid as provided for in such section. If such payment is not made then the ad valorem system and may be foreclosed or discharged without the certificate showing the payment of the tax provided for in said act. This same holding will of course apply to any mortgages which is recorded before January 1st next, where the same is owned by a non-resident. In such cases, the sitting of the mortgage for the purpose of taxation, would be the domicile of the owner and he being a non-resident, the same would be taxable in Michigan.

"On or after January 1st, 1912, the tax referred to in Section two must be paid upon all mortgages before the same can be recorded, whether owned by a resident, a non-resident or a bank located in this or any other state, unless the same come within exceptions referred to in Section two of said act.

"Section two reads in part as follows: 'A tax of 50 cents for each $100 and each remaining major fraction thereof of the principal debt or obligation.

"Section six reads in part as follows: 'and may pay a like tax of one-half of one per cent upon such amount.'

"The like tax of one-half of one per cent referred to in Section six, is the amount provided for in Section two, and under the provisions of Section two, a mortgage for less than $100 does not come within the provisions of this act. The tax upon a mortgage of $100 and not exceeding $150 would be 50 cents. The tax upon a mortgage exceeding $150 and not exceeding $250 would be $1, and so on. In each case the $50 would not be a remaining major fraction of $100.

"Section three refers to mortgages recorded on or after January 1, 1912, and such mortgages cannot be recorded until the taxes are first paid to the county treasurer, and such payment endorsed upon the mortgage. It is very probable that the new mortgage blanks as prepared by the various publishing houses will have the necessary certificates required by Section three printed thereon."

MONROE SMITH

Popular Charlevoix Girl Marries Chicago Gentleman

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Smith announce the marriage of their daughter, Helen B., to Charles Monroe of Chicago, May 31, at Kansas City.

This announcement comes rather late but is none the less gratifying to the many friends of the young couple who have been spending the last few weeks with the bride's parents, and left Sunday for their home in St. Louis.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Monroe are well known in this city, Mrs. Monroe being a Charlevoix girl and a graduate of our public schools, while Mr. Monroe has visited here several times and made many friends. He is now in the employ of the Good-year Rubber Company at St. Louis, having charge of the automobile branch.

JIMMY VALENTINE, WARDEN HANDLER AND ROSE LANE.

CHAPTER II—Continued.
"Never," into the young girl's face came an expression of dogged sweetness and regret. The woman's question seemed to revolve in her memories of a voice and face and a man and a personality which somehow she had never been quite able to forget.

"We sat and talked for a few minutes," she finally went on. "He told me that there were reasons why he could not let me know who he was and that he could never see me again, though I wanted him to meet my family to receive their thanks for what he had done. He was very nervous, but he had amazing strength for one of his build, as his handling of that ruffian showed. When he shook hands with me I noticed that his hands were very white and smooth and sensitive."

The warden was now leaning over his desk, intent on the girl's words. "I noticed that he had the habit of frequently pressing one hand nervously into the other, and—"
"He was tall, and he had blond hair," interjected the warden.

The girl gazed at Handler in open mouthed astonishment.
CHAPTER III
WARDEN HANDLER regretted that he had given his visitors an indication that he believed he had recognized Rose Lane's deliverer, answered the questions of the girl and the lieutenant governor by stating: "The man is as bad as the burglar he threw out of the car window—even worse. He's in this prison at this moment, I firmly believe, according to the description we've just heard."

"Oh, impossible!" exclaimed Miss Lane, her face coloring. "He was a gentleman, a thorough gentleman, and too young to be a hardened criminal." Her face became shadowed with concern.

The warden was vastly amused at this remark, which the young girl rendered with the quality of unquestioned authority.

"Too young?" he laughed. "Age doesn't run any figure in crime the way you mean. It's some of these young fellows that will take a chance at anything. You see, they're ambitious. They're anxious to rise in their business."

The warden paused and glanced from the girl to the observing lieutenant governor, then to the two members of the Gate of Hope. He commented on the fact that his visitors had disagreed with him on various points and informed them that he had determined to offer them a few object lessons, lessons with living models. "I'll show you," he said, "that these crooks we've got here will play their trade at all times, whether they profit or not; that, in short, criminality is a mania with them and that there's no use in trying to better them." His first exhibit, brought in by the secretary, was the celebrated forger "Blinky" Davis. At the warden's request Lieutenant Governor Fay drew a check for $5 and handed it to Blinky. To oblige the warden Blinky, aided by a knife and pen and ink, in five minutes had "raised" it to the amount of $50,000. The lieutenant governor pronounced it perfect. "I know where I could pass it, too," laughed Blinky as he was led away.

"I had him on the books once, and he couldn't resist riding the prison checks," chuckled Handler. "I could bring in fellows like that all day." He picked up an object from his desk. "Do you see this lock? A German inventor, working outside has spent fourteen years in perfecting that. He claims it cannot be opened without the key. The prison board has accepted it for use here. If the claims made for it are true. We have a man here paralyzed on one side, a sneak thief I have sent for him. He may not open it, but he will try, for he cannot resist the criminal mania that controls him. Smith," to his secretary, "get this Dutchman; also the gentleman known as 'Dick the Rat'."

When the decrepit form of "Dick the Rat" was brought in, together with the pattern inventor Bilekendorff-hach, he was given the lock, three minutes and a half. Ten seconds before his allotted time expired he threw the lock, opened, on the warden's desk, and with his repulsive, seamy face contorted into what he considered was a smile he inclined his head to one side. From his throat came heartrending squeals of glee—exactly the squeals of a rat.

Only the watchfulness of Smith saved the "Rat" from the violent, despairing onslaught of the German, who screamed: "I'll kill him! He ruin me! End mit a halp, mein Gott!" "You're not the first man to be ruled by a halp," laughed the warden. "Don't tell your wife."

Smith sent the inventor to the railroad station in charge of a guard and consigned the grinning Blinky to the cell that had long been his home. On returning to the office the secretary said: "I've brought Valentine along too. I thought you might want him to open the safe."

A disturbed expression came into the prison master's face. He glanced quickly at Fay and his niece, then talked in an undertone with his aid. He was interrupted by Mrs. Webster. "The two you have shown us do not entirely prove your argument, Mr. Warden," she said doubtfully. "They are the very lowest types in the prison. You argue a general promise from two individual cases. We do not maintain that such apparent criminals as we have seen should be liberated, but—she turned to Fay—"there are gentlemen here, governor, men of quite a different type—than these whom one never sees."

"Warden," said the lieutenant governor, "I fear the ladies have more interest in the more romantic types of criminals—poets, for instance."

Mrs. Moore rose indignantly. "I shall make note of that frivolous speech in my report," she snapped.

Handler thought of Valentine, who was being detained outside. He would give his visitors their wish as Fay seemed greatly interested. He would show them his prize exhibit. In spite of a belief that was taking a strong hold on his brain he would take a chance on displaying the unique abilities of No. 1283.

BLINKY DAVIS RAISED THE CHECK TO $50,000.

He well knew what to do should complications arise. There were dark cells in Shoe Slag for convicts the warden could decide to be sure. These were damp, dark cells below the level of the rushing river, rolls of years when the state had little money and little thought for those held to have broken its laws. There were cells with "straitjackets," where a man could be trussed up with straps fixed to the walls, like a suckling pig in a market window, only his toes touching the floor. Anyway No. 1283 was already discredited.

"Get Valentine!" he gruffly said to Smith. "Well, governor," he continued in a more amiable tone, "I'll give you and the ladies a romantic type. He's not a poet, but he is doing ten years here for opening a bank safe without tools or the combination, simply by sense of touch. There is some poetry in that."

"Impossible!" commented Fay. "Well, the bank safe was opened and the money stolen, and his pal perished."

The door at the right of the office leading in from the corridors of cells opened. In came Smith, followed by a young man whose convict's garb could not overshadow the intelligence that showed in his ashen face. Clearly the prison air was working its baneful penalty on him with more success than usual in the case of men who entered the institution in good health. Vaguely conscious that there were visitors present, No. 1283 stood before the warden with his eyes directed toward the floor. His shoulders were square, he was of good height, with a frame which yet bore indications that he had been athletic in his free days. When he had entered the room the lieutenant governor had noticed that the convict walked with a free, manly stride, having no semblance to the shuffling prison slouch of his fellow inmates.

"Permit me," Handler addressed his visitors, with an elaborate gesture.

"To present Mr. Jimmy Valentine. He's put more time locks on the retired list than any three men in the whole place, and when it comes to the fancy 'getaway' only a cross-eyed copper can keep tabs on him."

The warden's picturesque introduction was lost on Rose Lane. She caught a glimpse of the face of the man in felon's stripes. She leaned to one side to make certain. Yes; now she could not possibly be mistaken. She extended her hand spontaneously and clutched the lieutenant governor's arm.

"Uncle, uncle," she said chokingly. "It is he!"

"What's the matter, child?" was Fay's anxious response.

"That is the man who saved me!" the excited young girl gasped. "That is the man who threw the burglar through the express train window!" The warden's shifting eye caught the agitated movement of Rose Lane as Jimmy Valentine was brought in, and he quickly resolved on a course of procedure that would place the young prisoner in as bad a light as possible. As for the lieutenant governor, he was almost as astonished as Rose at the unexpected denouement, and he quietly insisted that she say nothing more about the subject and calm herself. So far as outward manifestations were concerned, the girl followed this advice fairly well, but her heart pounded uncontrolledly, her pulse throbbled correspondingly, and a wave of deepest pity surged over her as she realized the horrible lot to which had been condemned the hero of the one great adventure of her life, the gallant Prince Charming of the only romance in which she had ever played a part.

The lieutenant governor addressed the prisoner.

"How do you do, sir?" Valentine swung around and faced the speaker. He realized that he could no longer conceal his features from the spectator. He pressed his hands nervously together and looked his questioner squarely in the eyes.

"How do you do, sir?" he said in a low voice.

Handler was watching the exchange of greetings with keen interest. "Met before, governor, have you?" he asked ingeniously.

"No," responded Fay. "But I'm glad to see you have some types here different than 'Dick the Rat' and—"

"Yes," broke in the warden. "Here, Jimmy, there's something gone wrong with the office safe. Open it for me will you?"

Fay fastened a penetrating gaze on Valentine.

The prisoner turned his face away and toward the warden.

"I'll do so very gladly if I can. What is the combination?"

"Combination?" exploded the warden, staring at the prisoner.

Valentine was as cool and as insistent as though he were an employer talking with one of his clerks.

"Yes, the combination. How can you expect me to open the safe with out it? Why, Mr. Warden, you must be joking with me."

Rose Lane smiled complacently into the lieutenant governor's face.

Resolved, That, whereas, a certain resolution, the record of which appears on page 29220 of volume of the proceedings of the common council of the city of Charlevoix, introduced by Alderman Pubback at the meeting of said common council held December 6, 1909, in fact, passed by aye and nay vote as follows:

Ayes, Ald. Pubback, Rachow, Nordrum, Swinton, Geiken and Webster.

Nays, none.

And, whereas, the record of said meeting as made by the city clerk fails to show the fact that said resolution was so passed by aye and nay vote:

And, whereas, the following alldermen who are now members of the common council of the city of Charlevoix, to-wit: Aldermen Rachow, Nordrum, Swinton,

Geiken and Webster were members of the common council of the city of Charlevoix December 6, 1909, and are the identical alldermen of the same name named above as voting upon the aforesaid resolution and have personal knowledge in regard to the vote on said resolution:

Therefore, resolved, That the clerk be and he is hereby instructed to amend the record in regard to the vote on said resolution proper minute of the margin of said record so that the fact that said resolution was passed by aye and nay vote and by the alldermen above indicated in the preamble of this resolution.

WILL E. HAMPTON, Mayor.

ERNEST J. HILGER, City Clerk.

Adopted at a regular meeting of the council August 15, 1911, by the following aye and nay vote:

Ayes, Swinton, Nordrum, Rachow, Geiken and Webster.

Nays, none.

Not voting, Glassford.

Ald. Webster moved the adoption of the following resolution which was seconded by Ald. Swinton:

Resolved, by the common council of the city of Charlevoix, That the establishing and constructing of a sewer including the necessary ventilation, gutters, manholes, lamp-holes, catch-basins, cess-pools, flush-trunks and all the necessary attachments in Meach St. from the south line of Dixon Ave. south to Chicago Ave. (thence on Chicago Ave. from Meach St. east to the main entrance of Chicago resort) is a necessary public improvement.

And he is further resolved, That the plans, diagrams, plat, specifications and estimates of cost of the Board of Public Works for the establishing and constructing of a sewer including the construction of the necessary ventilation, gutters, manholes, lamp-holes, catch-basins, cess-pools, flush-trunks and all the necessary attachments in Meach St. from the south line of Dixon Ave. south to Chicago Ave. (thence on Chicago Ave. from Meach St. east to the main entrance of Chicago resort) be and the same be approved and adopted, as changed by the common council; said change being an increase of the estimated cost of six hundred fifty and no hundred dollars, to $1,200.00.

And he is further resolved, That the expense of said public improvement be levied as follows:

First: The expense of establishing and constructing the said sewer in all interior squares and spaces formed by the intersection of streets and alleys, and in front of all public grounds, public buildings and city property, estimated at the sum of seventy-seven dollars and eighty cents, shall be paid from the general sewer fund in said city of Charlevoix, according to Act No. 25, 1895, as amended.

Second: That the sum of one thousand six hundred twenty-three and no hundred dollars, being the estimated cost of the establishing and constructing of said sewer including the necessary ventilation, gutters, manholes, lamp-holes, catch-basins, cess-pools, flush-trunks and all the necessary attachments in said streets above mentioned of said sewer from the establishing and constructing of sewer in said streets, shall be levied on all lots and premises, situated on either side of Meach St. from the south line of Dixon Ave. south to Chicago Ave. (thence on Chicago Ave. from Meach St. east to the main entrance of Chicago resort) and on all public streets and alleys. Provided, That the whole amount levied be and shall be paid by the said public improvement. All lots, parts of lots, lands and premises, abutting and fronting on either side of Meach St. from the south line of Dixon Ave. south to Chicago Ave. (thence on Chicago Ave. from Meach St. east to the main entrance of Chicago resort) shall be assessed according to the following described lands and premises, which are hereby assessed a special assessment district and deemed to be benefited by the said public improvement. All lots, parts of lots, lands and premises, abutting and fronting on either side of Meach St. from the south line of Dixon Ave. south to Chicago Ave. (thence on Chicago Ave. from Meach St. east to the main entrance of Chicago resort) shall be assessed according to the following described lands and premises, which are hereby assessed a special assessment district and deemed to be benefited by the said public improvement.

Whereas, the said common council did by the affirmative vote of two-thirds of all the alldermen elect, resolved to make the following public improvement: the establishing and constructing of a sewer including the necessary ventilation, gutters, manholes, lamp-holes, catch-basins, cess-pools, flush-trunks and all the necessary attachments in Meach St. from the south line of Dixon Ave. south to Chicago Ave. (thence on Chicago Ave. from Meach St. east to the main entrance of Chicago resort) is a necessary public improvement.

He was standing on a log when he fell into some brush and a sharp stick penetrated his eye. It is feared the sight of the eye is destroyed.

To show how real estate is moving in Charlevoix county since the organization of the Western Michigan Development bureau the following will be of interest. Evelyn township contains 15,830 acres. In the past two years there has been sold in that township 34 farms in all, over 3,000 acres. It pays to advertise.

The new See block is rapidly nearing completion and will be a big improvement to the city. On top of this we hear rumblings that two new stores are to be built on Bridge street. Do you wonder who it is that is going to build. Our guess is that it is the man who has already done so much to improve Bridge street in the past two years. Hope the rumors will materialize.

A Lansing dispatch says: "The advance sheet of the annual report of the commissioner of the state land office, Huntley Russell, shows the receipts of the office during the year to have been $250,271, as compared with $24,005 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, and $181,170 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911, or an increase of $76,074 over the receipts of last year and $25,866 more than 1910.

It is gratifying to learn that Michigan potatoes stand so high in the opinion of hotel keepers in New York that they are given distinction on the menu cards. This is a great feather in the cap of Michigan's potato growers. Wisconsin we are told is becoming jealous of Michigan and intends to compete for this New York honor. To this end Wisconsin is distributing among the farmers of that state pure bred seed.—Cheboygan Democrat.

David R. Jones of Lansing, chief fire and forest deputy, while in the city Thursday made the announcement that the open season for trout on Maple river will close August 31, contrary to the opinion held by some fishermen that an old act governs the matter. Act number 33 of the 1911 public acts repealed all other laws governing the season making the length of the time allotted to trout fishers uniform all over the state.—Petoskey Daily Reporter.

A meeting to discuss the matter of paving of Mill and Main streets, was held in the Emory Bros. store last evening, being attended by the members of the city commission and a number of the heaviest tax payers who are most interested in the proposed improvement. City Engineer E. S. Sacks of Charlevoix, was present at the meetings and told of the investigations which the Charlevoix board of aldermen had been making into the paving proposition, and the conclusion they had arrived at as to the most suitable kind of paving.—East Jordan Enterprise.

Händler's face became red—a deep red that threatened any moment to merge into a rich grape-purple hue.
"You go at that safe and open it just like you used the coin!" he shouted.

Valentine made a deprecatory gesture.
"You flatter me," he answered, and he smiled a most aggravating smile that caused the now thoroughly aroused prison master to pound his desk and hoarsely cry:

"Fifteen he is—d! You do as I say or I'll give you the law!"

Händler caught himself just in time. He suddenly remembered that the lieutenant governor was present.
"Say, Valentine," he substituted for his intended threat of the straitjacket, "you're flourishing because there's a gallery present, eh?"

No. 1289 turned and surveyed the visitors present. His gaze passed from the lieutenant governor to the two members of the Gate of Hope society. Then he crouched into one of the uncomfortable wooden chairs that adorned the warden's office, he saw a girl's figure. He leaned forward involuntarily, for he saw a face and a pair of large brown eyes fixed steadfastly upon him. He recognized the girl as the one he had saved from the remorseless clutches of Billy Cotton-Cotton, whom he had thrown to his death through the window of a transcontinental liner. But only for a moment did Jimmy Valentine falter. With unflinching control he wheeled to face the warden. "You are wrong again," he said evenly to Händler. "You know I am not what you would have these people think I am."

Now the grape-purple began to show in the warden's face. The thick veins in his neck began to thicken still more and to crowd his low collar for space.

"You better do as I ask, Valentine," he warned.

"I know that every one here knows that, too."

"You're doing ten for opening a bank safe and you can't open an old safe like mine?" The warden was sneering.

"I never opened that bank safe. You know that."

"You're going to pose, eh? Well, listen, you go and 'cop that gopher' or I'll give you solitaire for a month." Händler was now at his worst. A month of "solitaire!" A month, thirty days, thirty nights, alone, save for the rats and the river tides that seeped between the stones!

"It is an impossibility for any one to open a safe without the combination. I regret I cannot do as you ask."

Händler forgot the presence of the lieutenant governor and of the ladies.
"Get out of here, you!"

Mrs. Webster stepped forward protestingly.

Fay determined to take a hand.
"You're losing your temper, warden," he began when he saw the prisoner step to the door through which he had come. "Just a moment," Fay said commandingly to the convict. "I forgot your name."

The prisoner halted. He saw that the speaker had come across to the play because there is some one here.

"And you?"
Händler was apologetic.

"I've only—"
"If you please, I should like to talk to Valentine," spoke Fay boldly.

"All right, go ahead. He's waiting to talk."

"Valentine," said the lieutenant governor, "can you not as a favor to us, a lot of skeptics, open the prison safe?"

The prisoner came toward the door of the state.

"If the warden will favor me with the combination I will try."

Händler broke in. "You fourflush-

ing!"

"And without it?" continued Fay.

"I could no more do it than you sir."

"Were you not convicted for doing just what we ask?"

"Yes, sir, on the evidence of a dyluc crook and—"

"That'll do, Valentine," interjected the warden.

"One moment, Mr. Händler," said Fay, raising his hand. "You were about to say, Valentine?"

"Nothing, sir."

"I want you to talk."

"I would rather not."

Rose Lane had risen from her chair. She advanced and grasped her under.

"You flatter me," he answered, and he smiled a most aggravating smile that caused the now thoroughly aroused prison master to pound his desk and hoarsely cry:

liminarily toward the warden.

The lieutenant governor caught the suggestion and said:

"Warden, might I ask that this man, my niece and I be left alone for a moment?"

"Why?"

"I have asked a favor of you, Mr. Händler. I will be responsible for your prisoner, and the ladies will pardon me, I know."

"Oh, certainly!" spoke Mrs. Moore and Mrs. Webster simultaneously and walked out of the room.

But Händler was not so quietly disposed of. He snarled at Fay:

"Valentine will tell a straight story, barring a few facts. He was a crook; had part of the coin stolen. If you can jump that parlor, him!" The warden leaned forward and leered into the prisoner's face, saying, "If you try to make a sucker of me you'll get yours."

Händler strode hastily out into one of the corridors of cells.

Rose again addressed the convict.

"Where did you see me before?"

"On the New York Central train between Buffalo and Rochester on the 8th of June two years ago. You were alone in the parlor car. I came in and saw a man sitting on the arm of your chair. You were pale and frightened. I pulled him away and took him into the smoking compartment. He came back again, and I a moment later heard you scream. I came in, and he attacked me. I hit locked him and threw him through the window."

Rose extended him her hand, which he eagerly grasped.

"And then after you threw the man through the window," asked Fay, "will you not tell me what you did, Mr. Valentine?"

"I was afraid I might have killed the man, so I left the train by the wrong side at the next station."

"He was badly hurt—died later, did he not?"

"Yes, sir."

"Was he a friend of yours?"

"No, sir."

"Ever see him before?"

"No, sir."

"But he confessed that he was your partner in robbing the bank—why?"

"Likely because I threw him from the train."

"How did you come by the money identified as having been stolen from the bank?"

Valentine paused a moment before he replied.

"I won it of him playing whist on the train just before the row."

"Is Valentine your name?"

"No, sir."

"Then how did he know you as Valentine?"

"He asked my name while we were playing cards, and as I thought it none of his business I told him Valentine."

"What is your business?"

"I was originally an expert accountant; then I became an expert with the Globe Safe company."

"Tell me, did you give this evidence at the trial?"

"No, sir."

"Why not?"

"The man who confessed had died. If I had told this story they would have tried me for murder; that would have brought the lady in."

Rose Lane gave a gasp of ecstasy as she heard Jimmy Valentine's final words. She clasped her hands enthusiastically and turned to the lieutenant governor, exclaiming as she did so:

"Oh, uncle, just to think that he would not try to help himself keep out of jail by telling about rescuing me from that ruffian. And all because he didn't want to drag me into the case."

Rose drew a deep breath and gazed adoringly at Jimmy Valentine.

"Oh, uncle," she cried, "isn't he a perfectly dear safe breaker?"

When Jimmy Valentine recovered from the effect of Rose Lane's flattering description of him and felt that he could look the lieutenant governor in the face without the twitch of a single muscle he asked his questioner if there was anything further that he cared to know.

"Yes," responded Fay. "I appreciate any thought you may have had for the young lady, my niece. But as you did not know her, had never before met her and could therefore have had little or no interest in her. I do not see how any thought of her would have influenced your actions. What think you, Mr. Valentine?"

No. 1289 was temporarily nonplused by the penetrating perception and cold analysis of the lieutenant governor, who was questioning him as though he was on trial for his life, with Fay as the cross examiner.

NEW TALES THAT ARE TOLD

The Right Kind of Justice.

Notwithstanding the fact that he now holds the highest judicial office in the world, Chief Justice White continues his walks on Pennsylvania avenue, goes to his physical trainer three times a week and puts on no lugs whatever. Not long ago a friend found him standing in the lobby of a Washington hotel building, a letter in his hand. He then went up and said to the clerk, "I would like to engage a room here for a lady from Louisiana, a relative of mine."

"Nothing doing," said the clerk.

"What do I understand you to say?" inquired the chief justice.

"Not a room in the house vacant for that week," snapped the clerk.

The chief justice blinked his eyes, said "Thank you" politely and went out.

The friend who had spoken to the chief justice remained in the hotel lobby.

"NOTHING DOING," SAID THE CLERK.
by. When there was a chance he went to the desk and said to the clerk, "Do you know who that was you just turned down for a room?"
"No. Who was it?"
"The chief justice of the United States."
"Great Scott!" exclaimed the clerk. "Don't tell the boss." Somebody did tell the boss, however, and next morning the chief justice was waited on by a representative of the hotel, who told him he could have a room, a suit or a floor for the lady from Louisiana and if he would kindly indicate what he desired they would have the rooms sent up to him for inspection, Saturday Evening Post.

ROOSEVELT AND THE SCHOOLMASTER

Story That Was Not Relished by the Former President.

"I never saw Mr. Roosevelt flled but once," said a New York buiter. "It was over a twin story. Mr. Roosevelt, you know, regards twins, triplets and even quadruplets as great and unalike blessings, and he won't let any one poke fun at them."

A schoolmaster told the twin story in the smoking room of a hotel out west without intending any offense to Mr. Roosevelt.

"He said that a pupil of his turned up at school one morning nearly an hour late."

"Tommy," the schoolmaster demanded, "what is the meaning of this?"

"We got company at our house, Tommy replied."

"What's company, didn't it?" said Tommy. "Well, it's two little sisters. They come early this mornin' with Dr. Smith, and pop looks awful worried."

The buiter smiled and shook his head.

"But you should have heard," he said, "the lecture that Mr. Roosevelt read that schoolmaster on race suicide."

Strong Enough to Told.

The common idea of an artist is a slight, pale checked little person with a flowing hair and an amiable disposition. Norman Dunley Murphy, the Boston artist, stands six feet and some inches high. His shoulders are broad and his muscles hard from continued exercise in his canoe and yacht. A woman entered his studio the other day and asked to see Mr. Murphy.

"That's him standing over there," the attendant said.

The woman looked where Mr. Murphy stood, towering like an ancient eld, and gasped.

"Why," she whispered in surprise to the clerk, "he's big enough to work, isn't he?"—Boston Traveler.

SOIL SHOULD PRODUCE MORE

Need of Conserving the Soil From Now On

JAMES J. HILL ON THE SUBJECT

Principal Subject to be Discussed at Farmer's Congress

Mr. Hill Says United States is Robbing Soil Like It is Destroying Timber and Riffing Mines

"When the most fertile land in the world produces as much less than that of poorer land elsewhere and this low yield shows a tendency toward steady decline, the situation becomes clear that we are robbing the soil."

That statement made by James J. Hill, president of the Great Northern railway, tells briefly what the principal subject of discussion will be at the national conservation congress to be held in Kansas City on September 25-28.

Conservation of the soil will be the main purpose of the meeting. In St. Paul last year the main subject was "Public Lands"; the year previous it was "Forest Conservation." This time the meeting is being held in the heart of the agricultural country and "Saving the Soil" is the most important topic.

Mr. Hill, who is studying agriculture from the dollar and cent view, points as president of the great railway system, has made a study of what he calls "soil abuse." Some of the results of soil investigations that he has been responsible for in this line are best given in his own words.

"Take the case of wheat," he says "the mainstay of single crop abuse. Many of us can remember when New York was the great wheat-producing state of the nation. The average yield of wheat per acre in New York for the last 10 years was about 18 bushels. For the first five years of that 10-year period it was 18.4 bushels, and for the last five years 17.4 bushels. Farther west, Kansas takes high rank as a wheat producer. Its average yield per acre for the last 10 years was 14.16 bushels. For the first five of those years it was 15.14 and for the last five years 13.18.

"Up in the northwest, Minnesota wheat has made a name all over the world. Her average yield per acre for the same 10 years was 12.90 bushels. For the first five years it was 13.12 and for the last five 12.8. We perceive here the working of a uniform law independent of location, or soil, or of climate. It is the law of a diminishing return due to soil destruction. Apply this to the country at large, and it reduces agriculture to the condition of a bank whose depositors are steadily drawing out more money than they put in.

"According to the last census the average annual product per acre of the farms of the whole United States was worth $11.33. It is little more than a negligible rental in communities where the soil is properly cared for and made to give a reasonable return for cultivation. There are but two states in the union whose total value of farm products was over $300 per acre of improved land. The great state of Illinois gave but $12.43, and Minnesota showed only $8.74.

"No discrimination attaches to these figures, where all are so much at fault. Nature has given to us the most valuable possession committed to man. It can never be duplicated, because there is none like it upon the face of the earth. And we are racking and improving it as we are felling the forests and rifling the mines. Our soil, once the envy of every other country, the attraction which draws millions of immigrants across the seas, gave an average yield for the whole United States during the 10 years beginning with 1896 of 13.5 bushels of wheat per acre. Austria and Hungary each produced over 17 bushels per acre, France 19.8 Germany 27.6, and the United Kingdom 32.2 bushels per acre.

"For the same decade our average yield of oats was less than 30 bushels, while Germany produced 45 and Great Britain 42. For barley the figures are 25 against 33 and 34; for rye 15.4 against 24 for Germany and 26 for Ireland. In the United Kingdom, Belgium, the Netherlands and Denmark a yield of more than 30 bushels of wheat per acre has been the average for the past year.

"We might expand our resources and add billions of dollars to our national wealth by conserving soil resources, instead of exhausting them as we have the forests and the contents of our mines. For there is good authority for the assertion that the farmer could take from the same area of ground in four years' grain crops as much as seven years now give him; leaving the products of the other three years when the land rested from grain as a clear profit due to better methods.

"He can do far more than that by joining live stock raising with grain raising. Nature has provided the cattle to go with the land. There is as much money in live stock as there is in grain. Looked at in any way there is money in live stock; money for dairy products, money for beef, money for the annual increase, and most money of all for the next year's crop when every particle of fertilizer is saved and applied to the land."

BARGE WARRINGTON WRECKED

Owned by Hines Lumber Company—Bound to Chicago from East Jordan

The barge Warrington, owned by the Edward Hines Lumber Co. of Chicago, with a cargo of white pine lumber from East Jordan, went ashore here last night at 10:30 on South Point, one mile south of this harbor. The Warrington cleared this port at nine o'clock and had gotten around the point on which she now lays, when she was discovered to be leaking badly. Captain Britten, turned about to put into this harbor, but failed to clear the point. The crew were taken off last night by the Tug Taylor and life-saving crew. Most of the crew saved their belongings, but the captain lost everything, including all the ship's papers. She is a total wreck. The lumber is being washed ashore and most of it will be saved.

The Warrington was built in 1898 at Detroit and in 1897 was rebuilt. She was formerly owned by the United States government and used as a light house tender and was 132 feet long, 410 ton.

ANNOUNCEMENT

Secretary A. B. Nicholas, Jr. of Agricultural Society

Tells What the Association Hopes to Accomplish for This County

The Charlevoix County Fair association announces its 27th annual fair to be held at East Jordan, September 12 to 15 in full confidence that its previous efforts to give the public a truly great exhibition of the agricultural and industrial products of the county have been appreciated and that the coming fair will bring a much larger attendance and a much greater interest than any of its predecessors. The developments of all the interests that are allied to the farmer, to the home, and to the country estate is the object for which this fair was established. The directors have no other object in view. Not as a source of gain, but as a means of uplifting and promoting agriculture, is their hope for the future of this fair.

To this end we ask the co-operation of all the people, for as long as people shall dwell upon the earth so long will the soil be called upon to supply the things most needed by man.

Charlevoix county with all its wealth of manufactures has also great wealth in its soil. No county has richer soil than is found in its valleys, while its hill slopes hold great possibilities for the fruit growers.

The fair will endeavor to provide both instruction and amusement for the people. It invites exhibition from herd and flock, the poultry yard, the farm, garden and orchard, the flower garden, green house, art, needle work, domestic products and farm machinery. These will all pass under the eye of competent judges and premiums in money will be awarded the most meritorious. We propose that a premium awarded at this fair will mean something of value to the exhibitor, and to that end all the awards will be made solely on the merits of the article exhibited.

To the visitors we offer an inspection of the best the county produces with the feeling that you will go from this fair with the sense of patriotism and pride in your county that you have never before known.

The management aims by all legitimate means to advance the agricultural, mechanical and kindred interests of the county, yet they are not unmindful of such innocent sports and amusements as will tend to vary any possible monotony, produce healthful relaxation, recreation and enjoyment and to that end have secured one of the biggest aerial sensations of the day the "Flying Brickets" who will be seen each day at the fair in some of the most daring feats imaginable.

The races also will form an important part of the fair's attraction. They will be honestly conducted and liberal prizes will be fairly awarded. Entries are already being made for the different events and we are practically assured that this year's speed contests will furnish the best races ever held on our track.

Let each and every man, woman and child put their shoulder to the wheel and help make this year's fair the very best. This is your fair not mine, everybody boost and everybody come and have one of the best times of your life.

Yours for a successful fair, A. B. Nicholas, Jr. Secretary.

LECTURE COURSE

The Charlevoix Socialists are contemplating arranging for a lecture course which is being arranged by the national office of the Socialist party. This will consist of five numbers by the best known and most capable speakers in the United States.

The national office has secured the services of H. G. Creel, for several years with the "Appeal to Reason" to explain the details of the plan to the locals, and he will be at the opera house next Sunday afternoon, August 27 at three o'clock. Mr. Creel will also give his interesting lecture "Tricks of the Press." All are invited to come and hear him. No charge for admission. 13411 Committee.

TO BOOM GOOD ROADS

State Association Will Meet in Lansing August 31, September 1

Secretary Colgrove Sends Out Letter Urging Large Attendance

The annual meeting of the Michigan State Good Roads association will be held at the city of Lansing, August 31 and September 1, 1911. The meeting will be held in the Representative hall. This promises to be the largest and most enthusiastic gathering of road builders ever held in Michigan.

Governor Osborn will deliver an address, not only worthy of the splendid governor that he is, but more than ordinarily instructive because of his pronounced views on road legislation and the county road system. Speakers from Ohio, Indiana, Illinois and Washington, as well as many prominent men of Michigan will present and discuss the different phases of the good roads problem. State Highway Commissioner Ely has kindly consented to throw open the doors of his department for entertainment, and instruction. His deputies have kindly consented to give practical demonstration in the building of the various classes of roads specified in the statute, and also the proper method of maintaining our public highways. The automobile club have promised to place 100 machines at our disposal and to convey visitors and representatives not only to the places of special interest, including the public institutions of Lansing, but to and from the roads selected for demonstration by the State Highway department. The Citizens committee of Lansing are enthusiastic over this meeting, and have promised us a program of entertainment, musical and otherwise, unexcelled. Important committees have already been appointed to submit a new set of by-laws and constitution, as well as a committee on incorporation. The five questions relating to good roads will be discussed.

We are especially anxious that you should come to the state capital and participate in this gathering in order that you may take back useful information regarding one of the most important questions that confront our people today. Every city and village in the state will be asked through its mayors and councils to send representatives. Nothing short of 1,000 enthusiastic good roads men will satisfy our hopes and expectations. This association is on the eve of sending 20 organizers into the field. The work of these organizers has already been outlined.

WOULD NOT CUT WEEDS

Central Lake Man Runs Up Against the Weed Law

Before Justice of the Peace W. H. Easton the case of the People vs. William Tyler was held yesterday afternoon in the council rooms.

The case started on complaint of George Turner. Mr. Turner is overseer of highways in Central Lake township and the trouble started over the enforcement of the weed law.

The state law says in regard to noxious weeds that notices shall be posted throughout the township stating that all noxious weeds must be cut by July first or ten days thereafter. In case of the failure of any owner of lands to comply with this notice, the township officers are compelled to cut the weeds and the cost of cutting shall be assessed to the owners of the lands the same as other taxes are levied and collected. It appears in this case that Mr. Tyler had not complied with the law and when Mr. Turner came along with his force of men and went to work on Tyler's land he was ordered off the property. Mr. Turner claims that he tried to reason with Mr. Tyler but that Tyler said that he would knock their brains out with a stone if they attempted to come on his property. Several other threats are alleged to have been made by Mr. Tyler and Mr. Turner fearing for his personal safety brought suit to have Tyler put under bonds to keep the peace. Mr. Tyler was taken to Belleaire by Sheriff Chapin Tuesday and yesterday he was brought back to stand trial.

Presenting Attorney Meggiani conducted the case for the people and Mr. Tyler appeared without an attorney. The facts of the case were put before the jury by several witnesses and after deliberating a short time they brought in a verdict of guilty and recommended that Mr. Tyler be put under bonds to keep the peace for three months. Mr. Tyler immediately furnished a bondsman but when it came to settling the costs of the suit he refused to settle. He was given the choice of settling the costs or spending the next 15 days in the county jail and accepted the jail sentence. He accompanied the sheriff back to Belleaire last night.

Considerable sympathy was expressed for Mr. Tyler. He is an old gentleman and his present trouble was brought on by his ignorance of the law. At the beginning of the suit he was urged to plead guilty and thus save the expense of the trial but he was positive that he would be freed by a jury so he refused.

STATE BOARD IN SESSION

Hot Contest Between Agricultural and Industrial Counties

Valuation of State Will be Raised Over a Billion

In its report to the state board of equalization, the tax commission places the entire valuation of taxable property of the state at $2,061,538,812. The state was valued five years ago by the commission at $1,331,568,000, equalized at that time at $1,759,500,000.

Monday morning at Lansing one of the most important sessions in the government of the state was begun. It will also be one of the most bitter fights Michigan has ever seen in many a year. This is the meeting of the state board of equalization at which it is expected, the valuation of the property in Michigan will be increased from three-fourths of a billion to a billion and a half. It is expected that the increase will be at least $2,500,000,000 and possibly to $3,000,000,000.

The fight will come as a result of the effort of the industrial counties to make the agricultural counties pay their just share of the state taxes, and the effort on the part of the agricultural counties to show that they are now assessed proportionately with the industrial counties.

It is asserted that Wayne and Kent counties are assessed at more nearly cash value than any other counties in the state. Yet it is leaked out that the agricultural counties have figures to show that even these are not assessed as much nearer their true value.

To prove the statement all counties interested have for the last several months had experts at work taking off real estate transfers, verifying them and the prices paid in exchange of property and comparing them with the amounts assessed against these same properties. It is promised that some startling results will be shown, that will hit practically every county in the state, and incidentally help the railroads by reducing the average rate if the assessed valuations are raised to the same percentage of cash value that is assessed against the railroads.

Such a raise would assist all counties also, although those agricultural counties which are assessed at only 25 or 30 per cent of cash value would, if raised to 90 per cent or more, be hit somewhat hard. The raising of the valuations, however, will result in the lowering of the average rate to help the railroads, and at the same time will lower the rates against individual properties in each community when the state taxes are paid.

AUTO LAWS OF MICHIGAN

Governing the Use and Running of Motor Vehicles

WHICH IS NOW IN FORCE IN STATE

Several Points Which are Generally Misunderstood

Must Stop on Signal—Must Render Assistance When Requested—Must Turn to the Right

What precaution must the driver of a motor vehicle take to prevent frightening a horse that he meets on the highway?

What are the respective rights and duties of drivers of motor vehicles and of horse-drawn vehicles, when they meet on the highway?

What is the rule about turning corners on public highways?

What are their rights and duties when one wishes to pass the other; to which side should the passing vehicle go, and to which side should the vehicle being passed go?

What must the driver of a motor vehicle do in case of an accident resulting from the operation of his vehicle?

What is the limit of speed on a country highway, or in the city or in the business section of a city?

Believing that the most satisfactory answers to these questions will be given by quoting the exact provisions of the Michigan law, the Courier publishes herewith the subdivisions of sections six and seven of the state law governing the use of automobiles:

Subdivision 3. Stopping on signal.—A person operating a motor vehicle shall, at the request or on signal, by putting up the hand, from a person riding, leading or driving a horse or other draft animal, bring such motor vehicle immediately to a stop, and, if traveling in an opposite direction, remain stationary so long as may be reasonable to allow such horse or animal to pass, and if traveling in the same direction, use reasonable caution in thereafter passing such horse or animal. Provided, That in case such horse or animal appear badly frightened or the person operating such motor vehicle is requested to do so, such person shall cause the motor of such vehicle to cease running so long as shall be reasonably necessary to prevent accident and to insure the safety of others.

Subdivision 4. Whenever a person operating a motor vehicle shall meet on a highway any other person riding or driving a horse or horses or other draft animals or any other vehicle, and there being an occasion to stop as above provided, the person operating such motor vehicle shall reasonably turn the same to the right of the center of the travelled portion of the highway, while the person approaching shall likewise turn from the center of the travelled portion of the highway so as to pass the motor vehicle on the opposite side of the center of the highway to which the motor vehicle has been turned. And any person so operating any motor vehicle shall at the intersection of a public highway keep to the right of the intersection of the centers of such highways when turning to the right and pass to the right of such intersection when turning to the left.

Subdivision 5. If a vehicle drawn by a horse or horses or other draft animals, or a motor vehicle, be overtaken by any motor vehicle, and the person in charge of such motor vehicle expresses a desire to pass, it shall be the duty of the driver of any such vehicle or motor vehicle so overtaken as aforesaid, to turn to the right of the center of the highway, or travelled portion of the highway, and give the person so making the request an opportunity to pass, but in passing, the person in charge of such motor vehicle and the other male occupants thereof over the age of fifteen years shall give such assistance as they are able to the occupant or occupants of the vehicle they are passing, if assistance is asked, and in thus passing the chauffeur shall use all due care to avoid accident.

Subdivision 6. Accidents.—In case of accident to person or property (Continued on page 6)

JIMMY VALENTINE, WARDEN HANDLER AND ROSE LANE.

CHAPTER III—Continued.
"I mean," began Valentine—"I mean they would have convicted me of murder on her testimony very probably—at least that is what I feared if they knew about her and got hold of her as a witness against me. I did not believe they could convict me on the burglary charge."

Rose Lane's enthusiasm began to cool as she heard her hero in his explanation hint that, after all, there might have been some other motive than thought of and for her in his refusal to drag her into a vulgar, sordid murder case. She was not experienced enough to realize that Jimmy Valentine had to satisfy the keen, searching, though without heart, hearted lieutenant governor whose questions suggested a doubt of the convict's innocence. But the faith of the girl was not entirely shaken. She knew that this unfortunate young man would surely straighten out everything in the end. How could any one with so graceful and winning a smile and with such adorable eyes not have committed a crime as serious than the pillage of his grandfather's jam closet? Yes, he was the victim of some strangely terrible plot, of heinous machinations like those of the French revolution or of the Spanish Inquisition.

The lieutenant governor continued to press Valentine.
"But once convicted," he went on, "it seems to me that you would have made an application for a new trial."

"My lawyer is working on that now, sir."

Rose Lane pressed her uncle's hand and looked pleadingly at the state official as though supplicating his further aid for the prisoner. The lieutenant governor was responsive to the fair young girl's influence, and after a pause he spoke the words that were to fill with a new hope the tortured soul of Jimmy Valentine.

"Tell your lawyer to apply for a pardon. I promise you he shall have every possible assistance in his effort to secure it."

"Thank you, sir; thank you," murmured the prisoner gratefully, but his eyes turned involuntarily to the state of the girl, who he well knew was really responsible for his new opportunity.

"And you can thank my niece, too," added Fay.
"I thank her most deeply."

"That's all," said Fay, moving away and beckoning to Rose.

Valentine started as though to go through the door leading to the cell corridor where Handler was pacing restlessly up and down. Suddenly the prisoner reconsidered. He took a step toward the girl, who stood watching him with an expression of pity in her eyes. He bent over as though to grasp her hand; then with a sudden effort he mastered himself and straightened back.

He said in a low, gentlemanly voice, with perfect pronunciation and intonation. "But I—"

"Yes, we know that," put in the lieutenant governor.

Rose Lane was deeply touched by the struggle that even her little burden of knowledge of the world told her was going on in the prisoner's breast.

"Goodby, Mr. Valentine," she said softly.

The prisoner replied in a half whisper. "I would rather you called me by a name that is not disgraced. My true name is Lee Randall."

"Goodby, Lee Randall," said the girl. "Goodby. God bless you," was the convict's trembling response as he turned slowly away to be led back to his cell and in Warden Handler's.

"Rose," called the lieutenant governor.

"Yes," said the girl, going to him.

"Is he innocent?"

"Why, certainly."

"That's your intuition?"

"Yes, and that's all a girl has in judging men. Don't you think he is innocent, uncle?"

"I don't know, but I think he might be honest were he given the chance."

"And you are going to give it to him?"

"We will go to the governor. The matter rests entirely in his hands."

Rose threw her arm around her uncle's neck and kissed him fondly.

"The warden is very angry, and the man is helpless," she said fearfully. "Why, they might even kill!"

"Oh, no, Rose, not that."

"But you realize?"

"Yes, but I don't think they would dare since I—"

"But I am in a chill of fear. The warden's manner—"

"Most wardens are bullies, Rose, and I don't think this Handler an exception. I think a few words from me might—"

At this juncture Handler stormed into the office. He glared angrily at his visitors. At Fay's direction Rose went out into the waiting room.

"Finished your star chamber session, governor?" he asked sneeringly.

"Mr. Handler," sternly, "let me say something to you for your own benefit. You are an employee of the state. Employees have been removed, even wardens, for a speech no more courteous than the one you have just made. When Valentine gets out—and I hope it will be soon—I am going to ask him how he was treated, and if he tells me you treated him any worse after today than before I came I promise you a little polite b-l. Good day, sir."

The lieutenant governor followed Rose.

Smith had come in with the warden. The latter turned to his secretary as Fay departed and snarled viciously, his teeth protruding like yellow fangs. "Valentine, eh? Get him!"

Smith, his face gravely set, obediently went out of the room.

CHAPTER V.

The door opened, and in came Smith holding Jimmy Valentine by the arm.

The warden stood at his desk. "Bring him over here," he cried hoarsely, pointing to the space in front of his desk.

The secretary slipped his hand up behind the prisoner's neck and with a violent heave dug Valentine forward so that he was barely able to prevent himself from falling flat on his face.

Gritting his teeth, No. 1289 straightened himself and finally succeeded in suppressing the impulse that surged within him to spring at his cowardly assailant's throat. Probably it was the realization of the fact that he knew himself to be more than an equal for Smith in a hand to hand conflict that enabled him to restrain himself—the contempt of a strong, confident man for an ignoble inferior.

Smith was larger and heavier, yes, but the man who had hit locked the burglar, Cotton and had thrown him headlong to his death from the window of a rushing railway train was not one to be trifled with. Besides, no less a personage than George Rothner, the world's lightweight wrestling champion, had taught Valentine the possibilities of the "grappling" the "posse buttock," the "tommy knife," the "tying name," the "back heel," the rib crushing "scissors," the waist and crotch holds and even the features of the deadly strangle holds, front and rear.

Handler, bent over his desk, resting both his hands upon it, and sneered at Valentine.

"Why didn't you smash him when he hit you, you coward?" he asked the helpless prisoner in purposely aggravating tones. "You're losing your nerve in this little boarding house of mine; that's what's the matter with you. You haven't any manhood left in you. And, say, Valentine, when we have had you here as our guest two years more you'll be whining around like a puppy with the pink eye; that's what you're coming to. It's bound to get you—this life—just like it gets all the rest of you thin skinned guys. Only a brain can live this life and keep his mind and his manhood."

The cruel words of the warden sank deeply into Valentine's soul, as Handler well knew they would. But the prisoner was determined that he would show no signs of weakening before the two men who hated him.

"I didn't hit him because I'll square myself when I get out," answered Valentine defiantly, "and there are a few little things that I will square with you, too, Mr. Warden Handler. You know you have me in your power, and so do I. But, Handler, you're going to like me better from now on because, realizing my position, I have dared go against you."

But Valentine had mistaken his mark. The respect that one fighting man has for another who fights him squarely found no place in the craven heart of Billy Handler. Valentine had yet something to learn of the psychology of jail wardens. Handler's face took on a malignant expression. "Oh," he sneered, "so I'm going to like you, am I? Well, just watch me. I'll burke you, son."

Handler lunged around the corner of his desk at the prisoner.

"Don't burke me!" cried Valentine desperately.

Eyes gleaming with his vengeance, with hands outstretched, the warden came headlong at Valentine, who braced himself to withstand the shock of the oncoming body. Crouching, the prisoner primed himself to clutch one of the warden's thumbs, which was carelessly extended outward from his hand—a trick Rothner had shown him. Once securing this thumb, it could be pulled back or twisted to the breaking point if necessary to cause an opponent to yield, or by drawing the outstretched arm over his shoulder, wheeling his back to his foe as he did so, Valentine could bend sharply forward and throw his assailant helplessly over his head and on to the floor in a heap with the accompanying "flying mare."

But midway in his rush the warden stopped short. He had caught himself just in time. About to throw himself blindly at his intended victim, a thought (an inspiration he afterward considered it to be) flashed through his brain. The warden halted, much to the amazement of his secretary, Smith, who had been watching the proceedings with inconceivable experience in like happenings. Then Handler turned away, rested one hand on his desk and with the other stroked his heavy, square chin reflectively.

"God!" he pondered. "Suppose the lieutenant governor should get on to these deals in the contracts for supplies? He might, and then I'd need him to be my friend."

Handler, as he had up a box from the desk, and extended it to the now thoroughly thunder-struck convict, who was slowly recovering from the mental strain of the last few moments. "Have a cigar," smiled the warden graciously, with a sweeping bow. "Also permit me to offer you a chair, Mr. Valentine."

"By the way," he went on easily, "are you perfectly comfortable in your cell? If not, I want to know what I can do for you. I'm going to have Smith go to see you every day to do for you anything that you want, provided the rules of the prison permit, and maybe some things they don't."

Valentine, hardly believing what his eyes and ears told him actually to be occurring, dropped bewilderedly into the proffered chair and, taking a gilt bandied Havana from the box, stuck it eagerly between his lips.

"Have a light," said the warden, striking a match and extending it to the end of Valentine's cigar.

The secretary stood across the room near a door, eyes staring in his wonder.

The postal authorities at Washington, recognized the liability of postmasters to make mistakes in getting letters in the wrong boxes, have fixed a penalty of $200 on persons taking mail out of the office other than their own and not returning it at once. The law also includes newspapers. The excuse that it is the postmaster's fault "cuts no ice." If you have been getting other people's mail you had better take warning or you may get yourself in trouble.

Mumma's lake shop and ice cream factory in the rear of his store was practically destroyed by fire which was discovered at two o'clock this morning. The front part of the building and stock of confectionery, baked and canned goods was also badly damaged by the heat and smoke. The fire department responded quickly to the alarm and by well directed efforts confined the flames to the rear portion of the building. The loss is partially covered by insurance.—East Jordan Enterprise.

THEATRICAL

The Majestic has some good vaudeville listed this week. Homburg and Lee in their laughable sketch "The Office Boy and the Actress" are making a hit this week with the audience—of this popular play house. Their work is appreciated by the hearty laughter which is in evidence throughout the act. The office boy sings two parodies, which, excusing the severe cold he has, are very good and his execution of them are of the best. The last half of the week will be taken up by Phunkett and Burns "The Boston Beans" in laughable singing, talking and dancing. This act promises to be up to the standard. The motion pictures are of the best and are pleasing and entertaining to everyone.

The Charlevoix wishes to state that all theatrical comments are written by its editors and not by the managers of the theater. This will eliminate any feeling towards the managers if any statement is made that the readers or public may have, as a result of their reading the articles.

Neighborhood Notes

Monday, Highway Commissioner W. N. Curry, finished the work on a piece of state reward road 1,299 feet in length, on the Traverse City road beginning about midway between the Pierce and Power places, and extending to the county line. Tuesday afternoon he began building a piece of almost equal length on the Elk Lake road, beginning at the south line of Wood place and extending to the county line. It is almost needless to say that the work will meet the requirements of the state—Mr. Curry's roads always do. In fact, he has a state-wide reputation as a road builder, and his advice is much sought by commissioners of neighboring districts. —Elk Rapids News.

A letter was received by J. W. Hansen from Col. James N. Cox, announcing that the state military commission would visit Traverse City on the second of September to look over possible locations for a camping site for the Michigan National Guard for 1912.

A meeting was held at camp Chase S. Osborn at Port Huron, several sites being given consideration among them Traverse City, Port Huron, Ludington, Indian River, Long Lake and Flushing. After the merits of the various propositions had been considered, it was decided that the three locations first mentioned were the most available and most desirable owing to their proximity to Lake Michigan.

An invitation was extended by the board of trade, Mr. Hansen being chairman of the committee to confer with the military commission. —Traverse City Record-Eagle.

The local option petitions are being circulated in Grand Traverse county, and are being more freely signed than even the most sanguine predicted—at least in the rural districts. Those circulating the petition in Acme township now predict that before the time for posting the petition will contain the names of at least 100 voters, or about two-thirds the names of the poll list. Whitewater will do even better in its percentage of the total vote of the township. In much less than a year Grand Traverse will be dry and we won't hear any more about that pilgrimages to that oasis. —Elk Rapids Progress.

Considerable damage resulted from the wind and hail during the heavy rain storm about 4:00 o'clock yesterday morning in the vicinity five miles northeast of town. The new silo on the farm of Harry Riley was blown down. The violent hail broke out window panes at the home of John Montgomery, Charles Smith and Mr. Newland.

The storm was heavy at Central Lake also, where havoc was wrought with shade trees. As in the storm last week, Bellaire escaped with a heavy downpour of rain. —Bellaire Independent.

Not content with pulling drowning men out of Douglas Lake, Winnie Bryant, daughter of Landlord Bryant of the Douglas Lake hotel, has taken to pulling stumps. She discovered her talent in this line by accident, but is not taking any contracts at present. Now Winnie doesn't pull stumps by hand but uses her father's automobile. The other day she thought she would run the automobile all by her lonesome. She had no trouble in starting the machine, but when it came to steering and stopping, that was different. The machine started for the tall timber. Over a good sized stump it went but did not stop until a large and friendly tree came to the rescue. How the machine got over the stump was a mystery to Winnie, but on investigation found that the stump had been pulled up and clean by the roots. Fortunately the auto was but slightly damaged. —Pellston Journal.

The monthly mortality report issued by the Secretary of State Martindale shows that 3,444 deaths occurred in Michigan during July, which corresponds to the annual death rate 130 per 1,000 estimated population. Tuberculosis caused the death of 265; enteritis and diarrhea to children under two years of age, 232; cancer 171; and violence, 312. There was also reported 67 deaths from drowning, nine from sunstroke and six from tetanus.

There were 5,001 births reported during the month of July. This corresponds to the annual birth rate of 20.7 per 1,000 estimated population. A decrease of 231 is noted in the number of births as compared with the month of June.

Loss of Time Means Loss of Pay.

Kidney trouble and the ill it breeds means lost time and lost pay to many a working man. M. B. Allen, 1211 Little Penna. St., Stentor, Ill., was so bad from kidney and bladder trouble that he could not work, but he says: "I took Foley's Kidney Pills for only a short time and got entirely well and was soon able to go back to work, and am feeling well and healthier than before." Foley's Kidney Pills are tonic in action, quick in results—a good friend to the working man or woman who suffers from kidney ills. Sold by Frank N. Metcalf.

Literary Notes

Miss Blanche Ring is the song-writer's friend, and to have her choose a song for her repertoire as the season opens means the positive success of the song. She generally secures the exclusive rights for a certain period, and no other singer is allowed to sing it in public during that time. She is still the leading lady with the "Yankee Girl" company, and this year she is featuring Jerome and Schwartz's song, "Let's Make Love Among the Roses." Here are few singers who know so well how to put a song over the footlights as Miss Ring, and her winning ways invariably induce her audiences to join in the chorus and the "en-semble" combining the full chorus on the stage, the orchestra, and a vast chorus, is worth hearing. No one enjoys the effect more than Miss Ring, and she always renders a profusion of thanks to the chorus in front who work to make her songs a success—and pay for that privilege. The chorus is simple and sweet.

"Let's make love among the roses, dearie, yoh and I; Stealing little kisses and tender kisses on the sly. Where the honey bees are sipping honey you'll find no gloom; Let's make love among the roses, where the roses bloom."

HEED THE WARNING

Many Charlevoix People Have Done So.

When the kidneys are sick they give unmistakable warnings that should not be ignored. By examining the urines and treating the kidneys upon the first sign of disorder many days of suffering may be saved. Sick kidneys expel a dark, ill-smelling urine, full of "brick-dust," sediment and painful in passage. Stagnant kidneys cause a dull pain in the small of the back, headaches, dizzy spells, tired, languid feelings, and frequent rheumatic twinges.

Doan's Kidney Pills are for the kidneys only. If you suffer from any of the above symptoms you can use no better remedy.

Charlevoix People recommend Doan's Kidney Pills.

W. George Linn, Charlevoix, Michigan, says: "We have used Doan's Kidney Pills in our family for the past five years and have found that they are effective in relieving troubles arising from disordered kidneys. We have yet to learn of a case where Doan's Kidney Pills have failed to live up to the claims made for them."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster-McBarn Co., Buffalo, New York, sole agents for the United States.

Remember the name—Doan's—and take no other.

Alcohol as Food and Medicine.

I think there is a marked tendency in the profession to regard the virtues of alcohol as very questionable. The old idea that if one is going to expose himself to extreme danger or extremes of climatic conditions, the body should be fortified by the use of alcohol, has disappeared. It is quite certain now that alcohol does not make one less apt to freeze, but more so, and that it does not give any such amount of energy as to be at all compensatory for the injury they may produce. On the witness stand I have stated that I considered alcohol a food because a certain quantity of it is burned in the body, with the production of heat and energy. In the light of recent investigations, however, and from theoretic considerations, I am inclined to the opinion that the effort to get rid of the body of even the small quantity of alcohol mentioned may, perhaps, consume a great deal more energy than is furnished by its combustion and that, on the whole, cannot be regarded as a food, even in the limited sense here described. The susceptibility to certain diseases of persons addicted to alcohol has been noted by many writers, and the records of death by sunstroke indicate that a very large percentage of the victims are alcoholics. The tendency which alcohol has to weaken the bodily resistance, therefore, is a matter not to be left out of consideration. The general result of the study of this problem has been an accelerated movement to restrict the use of alcohol in medical practice and especially in hospital practice. Both as a means of preventing disease and as a remedy this agent is rapidly falling into disrepute, so that it bids fair to be come merely a memory in our materia medica and the pharmacopoeia. —Dr. H. W. Wiley, Washington, D.C.

"Alias Jimmy Valentine"

Novelized by
FREDERICK R. TOOMBS
From the Great
Play by

as No. 12-1 leaped back luxuriously in his chair, crossed one striped leg over the other and sent fragrant clouds of blue smoke toward the ceiling.
"This'll be a regular Y. M. C. A. before we get through," he gasped. "I think I'll apply for a job as worsted holder for some old nabs' sewing society. This prison is getting altogether too genial to suit me."

When a young lad of good parentage and of sound training and education begins to chafe under the restraint of parental discipline it is time for the parents to exercise the wisdom got only from the lessons taught in the great school of the wide, wide world.

Theories and principles expounded ever so convincingly will not keep the growing boy at home after 7 o'clock in the evening when there is a chance to escape into the streets to meet the "bunch," the alluring, versatile bunch whose plans so often include the abduction of the Sioux warriors of the Dakota plains who have laid down the tomahawk to take up the agency, clay pipe and store clothes.

That is to say, theories and principles merely will not suffice to restrain the impulsive, imaginative, action-craving youths unless the parent combines with them enough knowledge of the world to convince the half-formed, half-trained youthful mind that the mother has the best interests of the lad in mind, that he has been through it all himself and knows full well the joys and disappointments, the fears and hopes of early days.

And it is the habitually stern, optimistic, unyielding and academic parent who convinces the young lad that he knows nothing of the fascinating temptations of boyhood. The spirit of compromise is allowed to perish by such a parent; the spirit of rebellion grows in the son's heart; a spirit nourished on the decay of the respect and love thrust aside by the father who would not understand.

A certain lad of sixteen years found life in his New England home far more compromised than was that of his companions of the same age and same comfortable position. He was not allowed to go swimming in the lake because his young friend Tommy Clark had narrowly escaped drowning. The fact that Tommy Clark could not swim and was "taking a dare" on that memorable occasion when he verged try; that he wanted above all other things in life to enter the school of mines at the university.

He waited five days. The answer came. The same night there were a vacant room and a vacant bed in the dormitory. Next morning came a search. Under a table was found a crumpled note that the tears of the lad had blurred as he read. The letter was taken to the president of the college. When this gray-haired gentleman adjusted his spectacles he pressed the paper flat on his desk and read:

"If you do not continue your course in theology I will cease to pay your bills at college. Should you discontime then you must return home, where I will secure you a position as bookkeeper at your uncle's store."

JIMMY VALENTINE'S FATHER, WHO BROKE THE SCHOOLBOY'S HEART.

Signed to this eloquent, brief epistle was the name of the young man's father.

Several years have passed since that crumpled letter was picked up from the floor of the college student's room. Several years have passed since an aged couple, soon to eke out their need of existence in a small country town, have heard news from the son who would not become a minister.

Several years have passed since a young college student appeared penniless and discouraged in a middle-western city and vainly walked the streets for days, subsisting as best he might, in search of any kind of work that strong hands and arms could perform.

So there should be tempered judgment shown, say I, in dwelling on the present fate of Jimmy Valentine when it is considered that he was the ambitious lad who left the crumpled note lying on the floor in his bedroom and set out to fight the world single handed.

That Jimmy should have lost in his first grapple with life should afford no reasonable person ground for reproach. Those of us who have not lost as yet quite humbly perhaps incline toward comparisons which favor our own acknowledged virtues, but at the same time the environment of our fellow beings at critical periods in their lives should always be remembered when the final estimate is made. It is human to have human emotions. It is human to have human ideas concerning some of our fellow men at various times; but, after all, why not adopt the optimistic philosophy of Jimmy Valentine himself? For was it not he who at the time "Frisco Eddie" bungled the "inside job" of a safe locking expedition in Omaha sought to soothe the father's feelings by saying sympathetically:

"Nobody is a failure until he admits it himself. You will never admit you're a failure, Eddie, so cheer up. You, therefore, can never be one."

Consequently Jimmy Valentine must be given a chance. His doctrine is the doctrine of hope. Give him a chance, in apply it to himself and await uncondemningly and dispassionately the result.

If he succeeds in making a man of himself, a man such as his Creator intended him to be, who is there to say that his past has anything in it to concern a critical world? Or who is there to deny to Jimmy Valentine his birthright if he should miraculously redeem it?

But should he fail in the great test—well, perhaps no word should just now be sent regarding him to the old home in the little town, to the father and the mother who would not understand.

CHAPTER VI.

THE weeks dragged slowly on for Jimmy Valentine after the momentous day when those Lane and Lieutenant Governor Fay visited the prison—weeks of wonder, weeks of hope, weeks of despair.

He concluded that the girl had forgotten him; that her interest in him had been but the evanescent manifestation of a fleeting impulse. Probably "Izzy" Shelden was right after all.

Izzy, doing a bit of four for burglary, seemed to know a great deal about women, and he had assured

Valentine that "a girl don't know what it means to keep her word, not that she don't mean to, but she just naturally talks so much that she can't remember half what she says."

The lieutenant governor, too, had apparently forgotten about the existence of No. 12-1, and Valentine began deeply to wish that his hopes had never been aroused. Far better never to have risen to the heights of expectancy at all than on attaining them to be thus rudely cast from them.

But Valentine had not realized how slowly move the executive wheels of the government of a great and busy state. A governor is held to a strict accountability for his official actions, and in the important matter of the pardon of a man convicted to state prison for a felony haste is entirely out of the question. And it was one day when Jimmy Valentine had lost every vestige of confidence in those Lane and her uncle and in the lawyer whom he had retained that hurried footsteps resounded down the cell corridor. A paper, a glorious paper bearing the seal of the Empire State, was tumbled before his eyes.

"You are pardoned!" came the welcome announcement. "The governor has released you!"

In one of the parlors of the Ten Eyck hotel, in Albany, within two short blocks of the capitol, Mrs. Webster and Mrs. Moore sat patiently waiting.

"You don't suppose Mr. Valentine would feel uncomfortable in coming to meet our party in a nice respectable place like this, do you?" asked prim little Mrs. Moore of her coworker in the Gate of Hope society.

"No," was the positive response. "That young man wouldn't feel uncomfortable or embarrassed anywhere in the world. This is the first victory for the Gate of Hope, Mrs. Moore, and I trust your report will be such as to encourage others to join us."

"It will be exact, Mrs. Webster, of that you may rest assured. By the way, do you not think we should have had a few reporters here to give public notice of our first triumph?"

"Your report, my dear—we will send that to all papers," Mrs. Webster smiled proudly as she spoke.

A messenger boy came in with a note from Valentine, who had come to Albany to thank the governor for his release and to meet the people who had worked to secure him his pardon. The note, written from the governor's executive chamber, notified the ladies that he would be with them in fifteen minutes.

Rose Lane and her father, William Lane, an Illinois banker, came into the parlor and greeted the two ladies, who informed the newcomers that Mr. Valentine would shortly arrive. Declining the invitation of Mrs. Moore and Mrs. Webster to join in light refreshments in the tea room on the mezzanine floor, Rose and her father remained in the parlor, while the two ladies departed.

Rose had not seen her father for months, and on his arrival in the east she persuaded him to accompany her to Albany to assure the governor that if he pardoned Valentine he would guarantee him a good business position. It is more than probable that this attitude on the part of a man of Mr. Lane's standing in the financial world had something to do with the final determination of the executive to sign the release papers. It tended to confirm in the governor his belief in the prisoner's innocence. Mr. Lane and his daughter had waited overnight in Albany after the granting of the pardon to meet the released prisoner, who was coming to the capital for the purpose already mentioned.

AUCTION SALE

The Courier's method of advertising Auction Sales has been universally endorsed by the people of Charlevoix county and by those living in adjoining counties who know how thoroughly the Courier covers this section of the country. We have testimonials from many of our patrons who realized far more than they expected from their Auction Sales.

Large Crowds are Always Present and Bidding is Lively. Why?

- 1st—Because the Courier is read in homes in Charlevoix county.
- 2nd—Because the Auction Sale advertisements are read by men in their homes at times when they have the time and disposition to read them.
- 3d—Because the Courier copies are saved and the dates remembered. If the dates are forgotten the Courier can be readily secured and the dates remembered.

With the old-fashioned Auction Sale bill, rain, wind and the "irrepressible kid" soon put them out of business. At the very best they cover but a small territory, and that usually right around the place where the sale was to be held. As a result but a few neighbors were usually present, attracted more by curiosity and a desire to buy articles for less than they were worth. Bidding was slow and articles sold cheap. The Courier Auction Sale advertisements draw people from all over the county and we have advertised many sales at which people have been present from every part of the county. They were present because articles were advertised that they wanted and they came prepared to bid.

The Larger the Crowd, the Livelier the Bidding--- Always

OUR METHOD OF ADVERTISING AUCTION SALES HAS BEEN ENDORSED---

- 1st—By the State Association of Auctioneers.
- 2nd—By all the leading auctioneers of Charlevoix County and vicinity.
- 3d—By all auctioneers in other counties where the same method has been pursued.

Any printing office can print Auction Sale bills, but only a paper having a large general circulation, such as the Courier has, can successfully advertise an Auction Sale that will bring results. The Courier covers the vicinity "like a blanket."

We would be pleased to hear from anyone contemplating having an Auction Sale and we will mail them information and suggestions on conducting an Auction Sale. These suggestions will mean larger and better results from your sale.

on death near the county line road bridge and the fact that the lad we are considering could swim very well made no difference to the father as well as to the mother. The son must keep away from the water. That was final.

The further fact that this boy aspired to be a mining engineer made no difference to this father or to this mother. It had already been decided for him that he must study for the ministry.

Three years passed. The lad was in college. The study of theology did not suit his temperament or his desires. He wanted, above all things, to go out into the world of action, to battle with the might of the strong man he was becoming against his tangible odds; out in the open air under the open heavens, down in the bowels of the earth or wherever there were mines to be dug and equipment and operated. He wanted to study the problems that faced the men who decayed the glistening ores from secret Mother Earth, and he thrilled with the idea that he could succeed in this profession.

TO HELP UNFORTUNATES

University Surgeons Operate on Wards of State

Members of the faculty of the medical department of the University of Michigan have instituted a new practice which will be the means of bringing comfort to hundreds of unfortunate persons in the state institutions of Michigan.

Believing there are many persons in these institutions in need of operations which only can be performed at a well equipped hospital, members of the medical faculty made a trip to various institutions in the state and examined hundreds of the inmates, and as a result inmates of these institutions are being sent every day for necessary operations.

The home for feeble minded at Lapeer was first visited, and as a result of that visit fifteen patients from that institution have been operated on in the university hospital. Most of them were operated on for cataract. Some of them are persons of middle aged who have been suffering for years, and others are young children.

In the latter case it is hoped that successful operations may relieve the trouble with which they are afflicted. In any event it is believed that the operations cannot help but be of benefit to the patients.

PICKING, PACKING AND MARKETING

Rulings of International Apple Shippers' Association

Both Barrel and Box Packing Explained—Name of Growers and Variety Should Always Appear

Picking should be done as soon as the fruit is ripe and the stem parts easily from the fruit spur. The fruit is removed by the whole stem; if the spur be broken, it may cause puncture of the skin; it also an injury to the future fruit crop. If the stem pull out, it is a pretty good sign that the fruit is too green to be picked. It is not likely that all of the fruit on the trees will be of uniform degree of ripeness. This necessitates several pickings, according to the stage of ripeness of the fruit. An apple picked too soon will wilt; one picked too late will decay. Some varieties can be left on the tree longer than others. The Spy will stand leaving on the tree until late in the season. Such varieties as Grimes and Jonathan must be picked at the opportune moment or the crop is spoiled.

An apple should be picked when the seeds are light brown and before they become dark around the edges; the fruit will then be of highest flavor and of best keeping quality. Red apples, however, are often left after the seeds indicate maturity in order that the fruit may put on more color. The yellow varieties and the self-colored varieties also are judged almost entirely by their color of the seeds; this is the best test for ripeness of fruit.

In order to get good shipping fruit it is absolutely essential that it must be picked at the right time.

Any orchardist who can guarantee to the consumer a uniform package of fruit in perfect condition has solved the financial side of successful orcharding.

The difference between eastern and western grown fruit is not so much a matter of quality or care as it is a question of grading and packing the fruit. I think the time is not distant when quality will be of paramount importance but hitherto the great demand has been for fruit of fine color and uniform size.

According to the ruling of the International Apple Shippers' association, the standard size for No. 1 apples shall not be less than two and one-half inches in diameter and shall include such varieties kindred in size as Baldwin, Rhode Island, Greening, Spitzenburg, etc. The standard for No. 1 pack of Winesap, Jonathan and kindred varieties shall not be less than two and one-quarter inches. No. 1 apples shall be free from insects and skin injuries; they shall be of good color and true to type in form.

No. 2 apples shall be hand picked and shall not be less than two and one-quarter inches in diameter; they must be free from skin puncture and bruises. One ill-assorted apple may deteriorate a whole package.

Packing—The barrel has been the standard package in the east for more than half a century. The box is the standard package in the west. In the progress of the art, there is now legislation relative to a uniform package. Both barrel and box has its relative advantage and disadvantage. The box is neater, easier to handle, packs more closely in storage, and is the best package for the fancy fruit.

The barrel holds more, is easier to pack and will stand transportation to foreign countries much successfully than the box package.

There is a demand for both barreled and fancy stock. The two classes will always exist and the demand must be met by the successful orchardist. Good fruit either carefully barreled or boxed will always find a ready market; but the box will in a great measure take the precedent for fancy fruit.

The box package resolves itself into two types of pack, the straight and the diagonal. The straight pack includes the three, four and five tier packs; and the rows run parallel to the sides of the box.

The diagonal pack contains the three, and one-half, four and four and one-half tiers. Progress points that the diagonal pack for the reason that the straight pack is very hard to put up; the fruit of the diagonal pack carries better and reaches the market in more sightly condition.

Whether the package be box or barrel, the address of the grower and the name of the variety should appear upon it is a guarantee of honest value.

The wind storm was a good thing for the fruit, says Mr. Westbrook, representative of the Armour Refrigerator Car lines. "There was too much on the trees, and there is plenty left. It was a bad thing in one sense—it brought a flood of wind-falls into market and prices of all kinds of fruit have broken as a consequence. If the growers could be brought to realize that they lose more by this method of cutting the price of good fruit, than they gain by saving the price they get for the windfalls, it would make them money. Some communities have visited in the past week have acted in this advanced manner, and while the canneries have taken a large portion of the damaged fruit at low prices, the grower realized that shipping the stuff meant a much greater loss when the good stuff is ready to move, and have dumped what the canning factories could not use. The peach crop is the best in the history of Michigan; and there will be more than any previous estimate has figured it."—Mancelona News.

ANOTHER NEW BUILDING

Charlevoix State Savings Bank Will Build Next to Levinson's Store

At a meeting of the board of directors of the Charlevoix State Savings bank, held last Monday night, the board purchased ground from Mr. VanPelt just south of the Levinson store and will erect a new banking house upon it. The bank is now located on the corner of Bridge street and Park avenue which office was fitted up when the bank was first organized. Now that its business has grown into the $200,000 class and steadily increasing the stockholders and directors feel that the bank should own its own house which will be spacious and modern in every way. The work will begin very soon.

LABOR DAY PROCLAMATION

The law prescribes that the first Monday in September shall be a Legal Holiday, and known as Labor Day. It is eminently proper that Labor, the real producer of all wealth, should be recognized in this manner, and that all should unite in making this a real holiday.

The Labor Organizations of Charlevoix have invited the organizations in neighboring cities to join them in celebrating this occasion, and I earnestly urge every business house in the city to close on September 4th, and permit their employees, and join with them, in this celebration. We all of us take life too seriously at best, and it is well for us all, laborer, merchant or professional man, to "take a day off" more often than we do. If the demands of the public will not permit you to close all day, at least close a portion of the day, and join with the rest of us in doing honor to Labor, and in helping to make this celebration a success.

WILL E. HAMPTON, Mayor.

VETERAN OF MEXICAN WAR

John B. Taylor, an Old Pioneer of Bay Township

Passed Away Last Wednesday—Had Resided Here Twenty-seven Years.

J. B. Taylor, an old pioneer of this county passed away at his home on Walloon Lake, August 23. Mr. Taylor was born in London, Ontario, January 1, 1825. He was married to Lydia Jane Henry September 20, 1849, at Pinckney, Livingston county, Michigan. They spent a happy life together for sixty years, she having passed away March 24, 1910. They moved to this county 27 years ago from Webberville and settled in the woods of Bay township where he has resided since. Seven children were born, five of whom survive, Mrs. W. B. Jenkins of Harbor Springs, Mrs. J. L. Bartholomew of Boyne City, Joseph and John Taylor of Bay township and Mrs. Mildred Fincoet of Harbor Springs. Mr. Taylor was an old soldier, serving in both the Mexican and Civil Wars.

A large concourse of relatives and friends assembled Friday at his late home to pay their last respects of friendship and love to the dead. The sermon was preached by Rev. Stephens of Horton's Bay. The body was borne to its last resting place by five grandsons and one great grandson, Veri Cram of this city. Burial in Maple Grove cemetery at Boyne City.

MEN'S BIBLE CLASS

Interest is Steadily Increasing Both in Attendance and Interest Shown

Interest in the Men's Bible class, which meets each Sunday at noon at the library building, is steadily increasing both in interest and attendance.

Last Sunday the class was favored by a talk by N. P. Hull, master of the state grange, who explained the great object of the order, of which he is the head, is to inspire the farmer to better farming so he may conserve the soil to feed the generations yet to come. Mr. Hull also spoke of the social work which the grange is doing and its great work as an auxiliary of the church and school in teaching and making better men and women of the coming generation.

Next Sunday the class will be addressed by Rev. Charles Welsh of Chicago and the Sunday following by Donald Wonders. All are invited to attend.

COLMAN PRESIDENT

Fitch Vice-President—Hopkins Secretary and Treasurer

Next Year's Postmaster's Convention at Port Huron, Michigan.

The Michigan Postmasters' Association are holding their state convention at the Inn, about 100 being in attendance.

Yesterday forenoon was devoted to showing our visitors the city, the convention getting down to business after dinner, when they were called to order by Postmaster Fitch, as host. Mayor Hampton welcomed them on behalf of the city, Homer Warren of Detroit, president of the association, responding.

Postmasters Brynson of St. Johns, Lusk of Bay City, Butler of Morenci, Scott of the Soo, Hunt of Grand Haven and J. Suter, Chief of Publicity of the Department gave interesting papers which were thoroughly discussed.

Last night the annual banquet was held at the Inn, Mr. Fitch calling to order and introducing Toastmaster George L. Lusk of Bay City. Mayor Hampton welcomed the banqueters, after which the Wilkinson quartette sang. President Warren responded and sang, "The Sword of Bunker Hill."

Rev. R. S. Brack of Savannah Georgia, sang after which Postmaster Colman of Kalamazoo responded to a toast and Hughes of Marquette gave a recitation.

Today will occur the election of officers, Mr. Colman being slated for president and Mr. Fitch for vice-president.

SCHOOL SANITATION

Secretary Dixon of State Board of Health

Calls Attention to Need of Improvements of Buildings

Fifty thousand American school children are annually removed from school on account of physical inability to continue work. Careful investigation in this and other counties has shown this effect to be due largely to conditions existing in many of our school houses, such as poor ventilation, improper lighting, uneven temperature, unsuitable seats, etc. That these conditions have been the cause and are to-day causing the indispositions of general depression, lassitude, headache, dizziness, lowering of resistance of disease, and a consequent contraction of the more serious maladies, as, pneumonia, tuberculosis, bronchitis, influenza, curvature of the spine, near-sightedness, etc., is an admitted fact; and the knowledge that 30 per cent of all school children are suffering from diseases of the eye should be sufficient to direct the inquiry of every parent, to say nothing of every school official, into the condition surrounding his child. Inasmuch as the years of early school life are the formative period of the tissues of the eye, it is imperative that money and attention be given to the end of proper lighting in our schools. Frequent absence from school due to colds and other sicknesses could be eliminated, were ventilation more effectual, were reliable systems of ventilating installed, instead of the common dependence upon open windows.

The experience of the Michigan State Board of Health in investigating the schoolhouses of this state shows that, while during vacation time, some improvements are made, to overcome the worst conditions, yet these improvements are only apt to be makeshift and inadequate. The health of school children demands a more lively recognition of their needs; pure air, supplied at the rate of not less than 30 cubic feet per minute for each occupant of the room; adequate lighting, from the left, or left side and rear of the room; adjustable seats to suit the needs peculiar to each pupil; clean, well-ventilated toilets.

The immense sums of money invested in school property, the economic value of every school child, urge the best management of the schooling business and the maintenance of the most effectual means not only of preserving but of building a healthy and strong generation of children.

MICHIGAN LOOKS GOOD

Offers Better Opportunities for Poor Man Than Western States

Chris Larsen, Croton township, Newaygo county, recently complimented the policy of advocating development now in progress in western Michigan. He said, in part:

"I have a new farm near Little River that I purchased a few years ago and find that Michigan is as good a place as there is for poor men. I have been all through the game of western promotion—went to California 24 years ago and saw many poor men fleece prosper. Located in various western states at different times and carefully considering all the various conditions, concluded to return to the first love, Michigan, and have in a small way been making good ever since. I admire the boost spirit in the west but have noted that if they happen to have a big yield out there we always hear about it but when crops fail we learn little."

"Some of my $25 an acre land here in Croton township has returned me a $35 an acre potato crop—but that was one year—not every year. "When Michigan adopts the enterprising methods of the west, the sooner there will be an influx of people here and greater prosperity; for any man willing to work can do well here. We have just as big stories of good crops to tell as any other state—and the most of ours are true."

Of Maple Grove Grange a Success as Usual

Master Hull of the State Grange Delivered an Eloquent Address

The fourth annual picnic of the Maple Grove grange held at their beautiful grounds in Hayes township, Saturday, was, as in past years, a success in every way. An immense crowd was present coming from all parts of the county. The program as published, was carried out in full, the principal address being made by N. P. Hull, master of the Michigan State grange. Mr. Hull, who is very popular in this county, took for his subject the problem of the proper distribution of the products of the farms, showing that the farmer received the small end of the profits and the power of organization to secure a more equal distribution. In closing, Mr. Hull voiced his well known opposition to Canadian reciprocity which seemed to meet with the approval of his audience.

The athletic sports were hotly contested and altogether it was a day of pleasure and profit well spent.

MANY CHANGES WERE MADE

In Primary Election Law by Last Session of the Legislature

COMPLETE NEW PARTY ENROLLMENT

No Person Nominated Unless He Receives 15 Per Cent of Party Vote

No Enrollment Possible Within Two Months of Election—May Enroll Any Other Time—Other Important Changes

A number of important changes were made in the primary law by the last legislature. Among these, the amendment of Section 4, relative to the time of holding primaries, was one of the most important. The new law provides:

Section 4. No person shall be permitted to vote at any primary election held in this state, unless he shall have been enrolled in the manner herein provided as a member of a political party. The voters in the various political parties shall be afforded an opportunity to become enrolled voters of the particular political party with which they are affiliated on the first Monday of April preceding the August primary election and on the last Saturday in January of each year. Provided, however, That any qualified elector may become enrolled and be eligible to vote at any primary election if he shall deliver, to the city or township clerk or other officer in charge of the enrollment book a written request for said enrollment accompanied by an affidavit setting forth that he is a qualified elector of said township, ward or precinct, and that it is bona fide his intention to affiliate with the political party in which he seeks to enroll: Provided, however, That no enrollment by notice and affidavit shall entitle any elector to vote at any primary that shall occur within two months from the date of said enrollment. It shall be necessary for all electors to become enrolled under authority of this act and no elector shall be deemed a qualified enrolled elector who has been enrolled under any prior act subsequent to the date this act takes effect.

This, it will be noticed, provides two enrollment days, one in January and one in April. It also provides that qualified voters may enroll at any time up to two months before election.

Section 5 after providing for the delivering of the enrollment book to the enrollment board, etc., says: Whenever any qualified elector shall apply for enrollment but shall neglect or refuse to give the name of his party or if he has none, he shall not be enrolled. Whenever a qualified elector is entitled to enrollment, he shall be enrolled by the said board as a member of the particular political party which he names.

Section 16 says: A general primary election for all political parties shall be held in every election precinct in this state on the last Tuesday in August preceding every general November election, at which time the enrolled voters of each political party shall vote for party candidates for the office of governor, lieutenant-governor and United States senator: Provided, That no nomination for the office of United States senator shall be made, unless such official is to be elected at the next session of the legislature. A general primary election for all political parties shall also be held on the first Wednesday in March prior to the spring election at which time the enrolled voters of each political party shall vote for candidates for county officers filled at the spring election for candidates for circuit judge and for candidates for city offices in which the provisions of this act are applicable.

The last part of this section provides for nominations to fill vacancies which were not provided for under the old law.

Whenever a special election shall be called to fill any vacancy in any office, the candidates for which are regularly nominated in accordance with the provisions of this act, a special primary election for all political parties shall be held in the city, county or district in (Continued on page 4.)

JIMMY VALENTINE, WARDEN HANDLER AND ROSE LANE.

CHAPTER VI—Continued.

Rose, absolutely positive of her one time rescuer's innocence, had made a proposal to her father regarding the future of Jimmy Valentine. Her father, tall, well built, with beard and brown hair streaked with outcroppings of gray, smiled indulgently upon her. He had agreed on her account to place Valentine in a good salaried position, but as yet he had doubts as to whether or he dared to secure for the ex-convict exactly the employment the girl demanded for him.

"Now, sit down and listen, dad," the girl said, crossing to a sofa.

"But, Rose, this is a most desperate thing to do—pick up an ex-convict and put him in a bank," Mr. Lane protested.

"Is he an ex-convict if he was convicted unjustly?" argued the girl.

"Didn't Uncle George say he was innocent?"

"Not exactly. He said there was a chance that he might be."

"But the governor pardoned him."

"Gullible men have been pardoned."

The girl would not be galasaid.

"But I want you to give this man a chance, dad—a good chance. He risked his life once to save me from insult."

She patted her father's shoulder pleadingly and affectionately.

"I know," declared Mr. Lane.

"And you must see him," Rose was becoming fearful of the end.

"Oh, I'll see him, of course, but to put him to work in the bank—why, Rose, it seems like lying in the face of Providence."

"Dad, doesn't it mean anything to you that I want it done?" Tears began to gather in the girl's eyes.

"Why, of course," replied the father. "Your mother left you 40 per cent of the bank stock, and that alone would make me listen did you see it? I even ask it, but who knows about him, and suppose it became known 'tho he was and what he had done?'"

"I've thought of all that, and I want you to risk it, and my 40 per cent wants you to risk it."

"And your heart, Rose?" The father's keen eyes searched the young girl's beautiful face.

Rose returned his glance calmly.

"Yes," she cried, rising and meeting her father's eyes undimly with her own. "I've known men who thought they were heroes all my life, who talked of themselves and bored me to death. And one day from a clear sky, when I was struggling in the arms of a bear eyed brute who beat me if I dared move a hand, this man came."

"There was no blame of hugies or anything but utter courage. He made the ruffian leave me. His voice was low, I could scarcely hear what he said, but there was a note of command and a threat of death in it, and the brute disregarded it, and he mattered him, a beast twice his size. He fought silently and killed him. And all my life that man owns me."

Mr. Lane was only half startled at the open declaration of his daughter of her admiration and gratitude for and sentimental interest in the ex-convict Jimmy Valentine. His trained intuition had already told him that she was more than casually concerned in the fate of this mysterious young man, whose record was apparently so bad and whose personality and ambitions were certainly impressive in their good qualities. Truth to tell, Mr. Lane was considerably disturbed at the situation, but he determined to accept it philosophically for the present and to watch carefully the future development.

"Rose," the father exclaimed as the girl concluded her statement. While he had realized her attraction toward the released prisoner, he had not guessed of the depth of her feeling for him.

"It's no good to be shocked, dad," answered the girl. "It's true. And then he went to prison on the death rattle of a beast like that, and I'm going to make it good to him if he's a man. And he is! every drop of my blood tells me so."

"And you don't even know his name?"

"Yes, I do."

"He gave you one, I know, but even that?"

"Well, what of it? Does a name mean anything to real men and women? No. The one counts—the one in all the world—and, well—that's all there is to love."

A pause ensued. The father was first to speak.

"Do you think he knows how you feel?" he asked sympathetically.

"No, nor he ever will—unless you some day believe him—worthy of me."

"You promise that?" relievedly.

"I promise, dad."

"Will you wait until I see the governor, Rose? Let us go to see him and ask his opinion of the matter."

"Gladly, and he will believe in him, I know," said the girl enthusiastically. She heard a step behind her, and she turned.

There, with his hat in his hand, well groomed and wearing a well cut suit of brown clothes—light brown, the fashionable color—there stood Jimmy Valentine.

"Mr. Valentine!" exclaimed the girl.

"Miss Lane, how do you do?" stepping quickly forward, extending his hand.

"This is my father," She presented Valentine to Mr. Lane, who welcomed him pleasantly.

Further conversation by the three was interrupted by the entrance of Mrs. Moore and Mrs. Webster, returning from the tea room. Mr. Lane and Rose departed to go to the governor's chamber, and the two members of the Gate of Hope society and Jimmy Valentine seated themselves.

"And now, Mr. Valentine, concerning your future," began Mrs. Webster. "What do you contemplate doing?"

"Get a position."

"We have already arranged that for you, Mr. Valentine," announced Mrs. Moore complacently.

"That is very thoughtful, ladies, but—"

"Mrs. Moore did not exactly convey the entire," objected Mrs. Webster.

"No?"

"We have a choice of three positions for you, Mr. Valentine," went on Mrs. Webster. "One is in a grain elevator."

"Yes," smiled Valentine. "I can imagine that would be a safe place for one under suspicion of robbing a bank."

The ladies failed to detect the veiled note of sarcasm.

"The second," informed Mrs. Moore, "is as a bookkeeper or checker in a scrap iron yard."

"Still under suspicion, I see," commented Valentine dryly.

"And the third as the first male officer in the Gate of Hope society," Mrs. Webster proudly declaimed.

"Yes," agreed the other charity worker.

"Treasurer?" the ex-convict queried significantly.

"No; secretary!" both the ladies cried simultaneously.

"I hold that honored position now," resumed Mrs. Moore, "but were you willing to accept it we would pay a salary. We agree that your knowledge of the—the—"

"The inside," suggested Valentine. "Exactly—would be a great help to us."

"Doubtless."

"Then you accept, Mr. Valentine?"

"No, ladies," decisively.

"You refuse the position?"

"Yes, ladies, in fact, I decline all your positions."

THERE STOOD JIMMY VALENTINE

"Ingratitude!" they exclaimed.

Valentine, who had deprecated their advances because of their evident distrust of him in spite of his pardon, as shown by the nature of the positions they had offered him, resolved to a course of action that would, he thought, dispose of them and at the same time afford him a long craved amusement.

"No; please do not say that," he protested elaborately. "No, no. I refuse the positions you offer me because I fear the world would misunderstand."

"What do you mean?" asked one of the ladies.

"Oh, you see," went on Valentine whimsically. "If I accepted help from you ladies the world might say that you—er—you were in love with me!"

"Oh-h-h!" ejaculated the astounded ladies.

"Let the world say what it dares!" proclaimed the pedantic little Mrs. Moore, lifting her chin defiantly.

"And so goodby, my dear ladies," said Valentine, bowing almost to the floor.

With anger in their glance and their walk, chin and noses pointing almost toward the ceiling, the two members of the Gate of Hope society stalked out of the hotel parlor.

Jimmy Valentine, chuckling in his amusement, sank into a chair to await the return of Miss Lane and her father.

Miss Lane—Rose Lane—the girl who had saved him from the horrors of that "bit of tea" at Sing Sing. How beautiful she was, he murmured. She had a heart. And she cared something for No. 1289; that was apparent. Just how much did she care? Just what did she care? If a man lived straight he might in time win such a girl for his own. Yes; that was life. And Jimmy Valentine now had his chance to "go straight," he reasoned. Stranger things had happened. The girl had revealed already, had she not, that she knew a prison sentence could not kill the good in a man if a single germ of it yet lingered in him? The old life was behind him now. The future gleamed bright and beckoned him on. Never again would he—

"Jimmy! Jimmy!" A harsh whisper hissed its way into his ears.

Jimmy Valentine started up in amazement. That voice, that whisper! He had not heard it since the night the Hartford bank was broken up that midnight surprise party in the vaults of the Fifth National bank.

Hardly believing his ears, he turned, dreading to turn, yet he did turn, and he saw, crouching half behind one of the red velvet portieres of one of the hotel parlor entrances, the figure of Red—the face and the brick red hair of Red Flanagan, his old time coworker.

CHAPTER VII.

JIMMY VALENTINE slowly recovered from the shock he experienced at beholding before him the man who had in the old days been his accomplice in many questionable adventures. No; he had concluded wrongly. No; he was not yet free from all the associations of the years past—those years which he was endeavoring to forget.

"Hello, Red," he finally addressed Flanagan. "Come out from behind the curtain. The coast is clear for you. How did you know I was here?"

Red came forth. "Oh, leave it to me, Jimmy, to keep track of an old pal." He held out his hand, which Valentine listlessly shook.

Red could not understand his former companion's indifferent manner.

"What's wrong?" he asked.

"Nothing."

"Aw, cut it out. Somethin's got you guessin', eh? So don't try to kid me."

The released convict looked meditatively at Red. Then he spoke.

"Red, did you ever 'do a bit'?"

"Sure—Joliet."

"And you have been in one of those rotten holes and still think it's a good game?"

"You're weakened—eh?" sneered Red.

Mr. H. G. Creel of Girard, Kansas, reporter, lecturer, writer, spoke at the opera house Sunday afternoon to an interested and appreciative audience on the subject of "The Tricks of the Press." He showed how public opinion is often created or moulded by lies or "fixed" pictures, glaring headlines, criminally implicating in their nature, and yet so illustrated or worded as to effectually screen their authors and editors from an action for libel by the individual or organization so attacked. Mr. Creel is a well-informed and forceful speaker, and those who were not present missed an important link in a well-rounded education in twentieth century journalism.

Above will be found a very novel and unique illustration of the different lines of business that are necessary in the completion of a home.
 First, to build, or to own a home, you must have money, and the best way to get the money is to save it, and the best place to save is in an account with the Charlevoix State Savings Bank of Charlevoix.
 Having the money, the next step is to buy a lot and Gregory & Benton have the best selection of property to please all people.
 The contractor is to be W. E. Parmelee, who will build the house, and the well-known contractor of this city.

Cement blocks are next in order for the basement, and cement sidewalks are indispensable, and the proper place to obtain these are from Lee Howland.
 Lumber being next is, of course, bought of the big yard of the Charlevoix Lumber Co., who will also furnish the sash, doors, blinds, etc., on short notice.
 A house with a leaky roof is an abomination, and the material used on the roof of this modern home will be purchased from the Builders' Supply Co., as well as plaster, brick, sand and gravel.

The Charlevoix Hardware Co. will furnish the paint to the painter, and guarantee a great saving in the purchase price, as well as a well-equipped kitchen from their exceptionally good line of kitchen furnishings.
 Plumbing should be done carefully and by a reliable firm, for that reason the Robt. M. A. Johnston Co. was selected for this work, and also for the installation of the hot water plant, as well as the electrical wiring.
 For furniture where would you turn but to S. M. See & Sons, the reliable furniture dealers, where you will find not only furniture, but a fine line of rugs, hangings and curtains.

Pure drugs are necessary to keep the family healthy, and the Ivy Drug Store, the Rexall Store, furnish only the best of drugs for the sick room.
 Insurance is always needed, and the Builders' Risk on this model home was placed with Myrtie Young, who handles insurance of all kinds for the leading companies of the world.
 No home is complete without a full assortment of table linens, napkins, and towels, and for these turn to S. M. See & Sons, the store is the place where these necessities can be purchased at prices that are right.

 All silverware, clocks, and other accessories for the home will be purchased of Fred C. Bellinger, whose stock is a most complete one.
 One of the most desirable building spots for a summer home is north Charlevoix, formerly the Boy City grounds, and the lots are now on sale.
 When about to make a purchase, build, or buy, visit the Charlevoix State Savings Bank, and see E. B. Ward, who has had 20 years' experience in an abstracting business, and who will see that all pertaining to right title is taken care of, and the description of your property is the very best to be had.

The Charlevoix Wood & Coal Co. who will see that your charcoal, firewood, and lumber are of the best quality and time for the erection and foundation of the home can be purchased of the Charlevoix Rock Products Co.
 Look, but not least, as a home, your automobile, and this is a most necessary part of the home, and purchase a new or second hand machine. The Charlevoix Garage.
 Read over again the list of the different lines of business that are necessary in the completion of a home, and you will see that the Charlevoix State Savings Bank, Gregory & Benton, W. E. Parmelee, Lee Howland, Charlevoix Lumber Co., Robt. M. A. Johnston & Co., Fred C. Bellinger, Myrtie Young, S. M. See & Sons, Charlevoix Hardware Co., Ivy Drug Store, Rexall Store, and the Charlevoix Garage, are the only places where you can get everything you need for a home, and at the best prices.

Grange Column

Wilson Grange No. 719

Wilson Grange met in regular session Saturday, August 26, 1911 with an attendance of 42 members and two visitors.

During the business session one application for membership was presented and the grange balloted on the application received last meeting.

The members voted to hold a bee August 29, 1911, to work on the dining hall, the ladies to come and get dinner. Voted to donate live dollars toward the grange building on the fair grounds. There will be a dance at the grange hall Saturday, September 2. The business agent will be there to lend to the candy stand and the Ladies' auxiliary will serve ice cream and cake. All come and have a good time.

The program consisted of songs, reading, recitations and stories. Grange closed in form to meet again in two weeks.

Superior and Farmers' Favorite drills, Ward and Gale bean harvesters, cheap while they last. J.R. Cooper.

Harmony Grange No. 1451

Harmony grange opened the program for last meeting by the members at roll call giving a quotation from the ritual.

The principal topic for discussion was "To what extent is the co-operative ownership of tools practicable and what tools could be so owned?" The discussion was participated in by several members, some thinking it impractical under present conditions but several thought under certain conditions the owner of such tools as disc harrows, grain drills and fodder cutters and shredders could be owned co-operatively, especially among those whose farms are small. H. L. Willson gave a recitation, Miss Ethel Travis, instrumental solo, and others assisted in making the evening profitable and enjoyable.

The Woman's Work committee announced that they would meet next with Sister Coykendall at her former home and that they would have a picnic dinner, the brothers being invited, meeting to be held September 5.

One of the subjects announced for the next grange meeting is "The Relation of Goods Roads to the High Cost of Living."

Ironton Grange No. 707.
Ironton grange met in regular session August 22, 1911 with an attendance of 53 members.

After the regular order of business the grange was turned over to the lecturer.

The lecturer's program consisted of songs, recitations, readings and instrumental music.

For the good of the order the motion was made and carried that they purchase a lock for the shed doors.

The janitor was instructed by the master to buy new wicks and burners for lamps.

The motion was made and carried that the grange place a light in the ante-room.

The grange was closed to meet again in two weeks.

Remember I have Fleck's guaranteed fly chaser, at $1.00 per gallon. Benj. Brown.

Norwood Grange No. 1291
Norwood Grange met in regular session August 22 with a small attendance there being so much sickness.

Brothers Ernie Lord and Scott's little boys, were reported ill also Brother Ed. Cook.

The business transacted was in regard to buying a hall and preparing for the picnic. Brother Van Pelt was present for the first time in a year. It is wished that he might be with us more. His talk always encourages the members in their work.

The grange intends having their fair again this fall only on a larger scale.

REMARKABLE BRIDGE.

Beautiful Example of Re-enforced Concrete Structure.

A remarkable bridge of re-enforced concrete has been erected to connect two cliffs over an arm of the sea at the extreme southwest point of Ireland. It is 172 feet long in one span and is supported mainly by two parallel arches abutting against the cliffs at the ends. The width between the horizontal beams is but four and one-half feet, and the footway is 150 feet above the surface of the water. Concrete was used in preference to steel because the bridge is in such an exposed position as to be often enveloped in spray, which would make the life of steel short and its maintenance costly.

The bridge was built to take the place of a traveling cage formerly used as a means of access to the fog signal station on the island cliff.

Geologic Work of Ants.

Professor J. C. Branner in the Bulletin of the Geological Society of America describes the immense importance of ants as geologic agents, especially in tropical regions. Ant burrows have been found at a depth of 35 meters, and they ramify over vast areas. The geologic work performed by earthworms has long been recognized, but Professor Branner believes that the ants and termites of the tropics bring a greater amount of earth to the surface than do the earthworms of the temperate zones and are in many ways an equally important factor in the changes that are going on in the upper strata of the ground.

Washing Coal For Coke.

Of the 2,000,000 short tons of coal used for coke making in Colorado and Utah in 1910 1,387,070 tons were cleaned by washing before being charged into the ovens. The washed coal included 836,067 short tons of mine run and 551,003 tons of slack. In addition to the washed slack, 429,728 tons of unwashed slack and 252,408 tons of run of mine coal were used unwashed.

CRUISE OF THE ARBUTUS

Through the Beautiful Spots of the Northern Lakes

FROM MACKINAW CITY TO THE SOO

International Arbutus Onting Association's Enjoyable Trip

Fire Chief Romeo Trains Members in Fire Drill—Fishing Good—Officers of Association

We left Mackinaw City, Wednesday at 10:30 a. m., August 2, 1911, passed picturesque Mackinac Island near enough so that we could see Arch Rock and other points of interest. From there we ran to the Les Cheneaux Islands, one of the most beautiful points on Lake Huron, these islands are dotted with resort cottages and club houses and bungalows and sail boats are to be seen here and there. From there we went to Detroit and then headed across the North Channel to Thessalon, Canada, arriving there at 8:30 p. m. We made a short stay at Thessalon Island where Parmer got a shot at a rabbit which was about six feet from him and the foggy little thing ran away. Arriving at Thessalon somewhat late, the time being one hour ahead of ours, the skating rink was about to close, we prevailed upon the "blonde" to reopen for another hour and we had a glorious time learning to skate—some were experts others never had them on before.

We left Thessalon, Thursday at 10:00 a. m. and ran to Blind River, here we had the first business meeting, our officers were elected and other important business attended to. We stopped here for about two hours. Leaving here we headed up the passage where we passed hundreds of islands all of them solid rock and the sights we had while passing these islands is one we shall never forget, and the one regret was that our wives were not along. We stopped at some of these islands where we picked huckleberries and some of the boys went in bathing, we also had supper while lying at one of these islands. We arrived at John Island at 7:00 p. m., Thursday, where we located the famous saw mill which was removed from Detroit in a single night a number of years ago. It now belongs to the Moltrou Lumber Co. of Bay City, and is thoroughly up-to-date and cuts about 110,000 feet per day besides desluds lath, pickets, etc. The population of this island is about 300 persons, a great many of the residents are from Bay City and leave the island during the winter. While there we met a cruising party from Chicago aboard their yacht "Allis." Other incidents occurred at this island worthy of mention and particularly the "fire drill" under the direction of Fire Chief Romeo. At about ten o'clock at night, it was about time for all to "roll in" the fun commenced. Some of our boys had taken their mattress from the boat and concluded to sleep under the tall tramway, they failed to notice the water pipe running along the entire length of the tramway from the mill, they failed to notice that there was a long two inch line attached to the hydrant until the chief had "turned on" and there was something doing—who will forget?

We left there at 7:30 a. m., Friday, headed up through the "Whaleback" channel, we stopped at Cutler Canon a rock island, towering about 150 feet out of the water. This rock seemed to be composed of several different kinds of stone and mineral, but mostly granite. The nights as you go through this channel are beyond description, and no one can even imagine the wonders until they have taken the trip. We passed through the Little Detroit channel a narrow passage through which all the large boats have to pass when coming out of Georgian Bay. We stopped at Spanish Mills, a lumbering town on Aird Island, where is located the mill of the Spanish Mills Co., a large mill cutting 150,000 feet per ten hour day. This island has about 300 population during the cutting season. After leaving Spanish Mills we passed Cloche mountains, which tower over 1,000 feet above sea level. We stopped at Bear's Back Island for dinner and spent the night at Shegunda, a little hamlet on Manitoulin Island. From there we ran to Kilarney where we stopped a couple of hours for dinner. Some of us took dinner at the resort hotel and met people there from Michigan, Ohio and Kansas and several other states. In our run to Kilarney we were halted by the tug "Magnolia" which had in tow a raft of logs containing about 5,000 feet, she had broken her engine, we carried the news to another large tug which went to her aid. From Kilarney we ran up McGregory bay a short distance where we fished, bathed and ate supper, then ran to Little Current on Manitoulin Island and stayed there for the night.

Left there Sunday morning and arrived at Bruce Mines at 4:30 p. m. These mines were opened about 50 years ago and produced considerable copper; there are the old and new mines. The new mines are about two miles from the old and have been run off and on as new capitalists have gotten hold of it; it was run during the past year. We were told that it is now owned

LOCAL OPTION FORCES

Organized for the Campaign Against Resubmission

E. S. Stacks of This City Selected to Lead the Dry Forces

Thursday night the local option forces of the county held a meeting at East Jordan which was attended by the most prominent local option workers of the three cities in the county, Charlevoix, Boyne City and East Jordan, who report that it was one of the largest attended, and without doubt the most enthusiastic local option meeting ever held in the county.

E. S. Stacks, of this city, who had charge of the campaign in this section three years ago, was selected to take charge of the work and make a personal canvass of the entire territory. It is the opinion of Mr. Stacks as well as all who attended the meeting, that Charlevoix county will never again return to the wet column.

The wets, it is reported are already at work planning to circulate a petition for resubmission of the question at the spring election and are certain of success as on account of the light vote cast at the last election it will require a little over 700 signatures to force a resubmission. While we are of the opinion that the wets are very apt to force a resubmission of the question of local option in this county we don't believe that the voters of Charlevoix county will ever vote to return to open saloons.

At the meeting Thursday night the following officers were elected for the County Local Option Association: President, W. P. Porter, East Jordan; vice-president, W. H. White, Boyne City; secretary, A. M. Wilkinson, Charlevoix; treasurer, Roy Taylor, Boyne City.

Ample funds were pledged at the meeting and collections will start immediately to supply the necessary funds to start the ball rolling and show the wets that Charlevoix county is going to remain dry.

Everybody who believes that this city and county has enjoyed unequalled prosperity since the banishment of the saloons should lend a hand to help the good cause along and keep our county free from the liquor traffic.

BIDS WANTED FOR CONSTRUCTION WORK

Notice is hereby given that the Charlevoix State Savings Bank, Charlevoix, Michigan, will receive bids for the construction of a stone and brick bank building according to plans and specifications which can be seen at its office or at the office of E. H. Mead, Architect, Harbor Springs, Michigan, up to 2:30 p. m. Tuesday Sept. 12, 1911. Bids may be for the entire building or for the excavating and basement separately and the building above the foundation separately. The Charlevoix State Savings Bank reserves the right to reject any and all bids.

APPLES FOR SHOW

Many Choice Lots Collected by Development Bureau

All Growers Who Have Fine Specimens are Urged to Notify Management

Both the Western Michigan Development Bureau and the original Fruit Belt association are busy securing apples for the big display they will make at the first Michigan Land and Apple show in the Coliseum in Grand Rapids, November 7 to 11. They have scouts out who are covering their respective territories. The scouts are not only picking up choice specimens of summer and early fall apples, but are also making engagements for choice specimens of later apples. The apples as fast as they ripen are being shipped to Grand Rapids where they are being placed in cold storage to await the opening of the apple show.

In shipping the apples great care is taken to preserve them from bruises. Each apple is wrapped separately in paper and in the bottom of the basket is placed excelsior or some other substance to absorb possible shock.

In addition, to the apples to be displayed by these two big development bureaus, there will be individual displays by various growers. Farmers who have exceptional fruit have been writing to the management asking for space and a section of the big Coliseum has been set aside for them. It is expected that many will take this opportunity to show to the world what their orchards are capable of producing. The fact that fruit men from all over the middle west will be in attendance at this show is stimulating the interest of the individual exhibitors. Applications for space should be made at once, as it is limited. Indications point to numerous individual exhibitions of handsome specimens of Michigan apples.

Growers who have apples of a quality that warrants their display at the big apple show, but who do not care to make individual showing should notify the apple show management at the Evening Press building Grand Rapids, so that their fruit may be included in the mass displays of one or the other of the development bureaus, according to the territory in which the apples are grown.

Some farmers are in a spirit of local patriotism, donating apples to the displays of the two bureaus, but the scouts of the Western Michigan Development Bureau are also buying apples for this bureau's exhibit where choice stock can be secured.

MUST ADVERTISE IT

Michigan Law in Regard to Finder of Valuable Property

By Michigan law, one who finds money or other valuable articles is under obligation to take immediate and exhaustive steps to discover the owner and to restore his property to him. Our statutes provide that within two days notice of the finding must be posted in two public places within the township; within three days notification must be made to the township clerk. If the property is valued at $10 or more an advertisement must be inserted in a newspaper and continued for six weeks, the first publication being not less than thirty days after the finding takes place.

Neglect of these precautions deprives the finder of the possibility of securing any title to the articles found, and might be construed into an intention to deprive the rightful owner of his property, which is expressly declared to be a misdemeanor and subjects the guilty person to a fine with alternative imprisonment.

WILL TRY PARCEL POST

Postmaster General Hitchcock Will Give Trial

On Rural Routes—Will Extend the System in Time

An outline of the program of legislation for the postal service which Postmaster General Hitchcock will ask the congress to follow during the regular session to begin in December, was indicated by Mr. Hitchcock last week.

He will recommend the establishment of a parcels post service on rural mail routes; the crystallization into law of proposed increases in second class mail rates and the enactment of a proposed law providing for a radical change in the system of compensating the railroads for transporting the mails.

Mr. Hitchcock explained that it was his idea first to establish parcel post rural routes in order that the administrative details of the system might be worked out without disadvantage to the postal service generally. Gradually he would extend the parcel service to urban communities, so that packages and parcels might be delivered locally by city carriers. Subsequently the service would be extended to include railroad transportation.

The continuous flow of the mails particularly the commercial and business mails, cannot be interfered with and cannot be allowed to be disturbed," said Mr. Hitchcock. "The institution of parcels post service, if attempted in rural territories, in cities and in the railway mails, simultaneously would seriously embarrass the whole country, for it scarcely could be put into operation in that fashion without cluttering up every postoffice in the country. By working out a system by degrees, however, we shall be able to extend the service with no inconvenience or embarrassment to anybody. It will require an immense increase of both carrier and clerical forces, but once started it will be of enormous value to the people."

Mr. Hitchcock intimated the administration expects to adopt the resolutions of the Hughes-second class rate commission which has been in session for several weeks in New York. The commission's report will be submitted to the congress in December.

CAUSES OF TYPHOID

Filth, Flies, Fingers and Food Must Be Watched

Typhoid Carriers Explained by the State Board of Health.

Typhoid fever is a specific infection caused by the typhoid bacillus. That this organism is present in the excretions of those sick with typhoid fever, has long been known and disinfection of such excretions has been practiced to prevent the spread of the disease.

Up to within a few years ago however, little attention has been paid to the so-called "Typhoid Carrier." When the Board of Health of the City of New York discovered "Typhoid Mary," a cook who, although she had never knowingly had typhoid fever, had been the cause of half a dozen well marked typhoid epidemics, she was regarded as a scientific curiosity; but since that time bacteriologic researches have disclosed the fact that this walking typhoid incubator deserves no singular distinction. Such typhoid carriers appear to be quite common.

Typhoid carriers are individuals who, although not suffering from typhoid fever are discharging typhoid bacilli in their excreta. They are virtually culture tubes in which a constant supply of germs is being developed and discharged. They are divided into two types: First those who have had typhoid fever; second, those who have never or at least not knowingly had typhoid fever. Every person who has typhoid fever continues to excrete typhoid bacilli for a variable period after recovery. In most cases this period will not exceed a few weeks, but may continue for many years. In some instances typhoid bacilli are found in the excreta of persons who have apparently never had typhoid fever. This is explained by assuming that the individual possessed a certain amount of immunity at the time of infection and did not undergo the ordinary course of fever.

Individuals have a varying degree of resistance to typhoid infection and the severity of the disease will vary accordingly. The relative number of typhoid carriers in each community varies as the amount of typhoid fever. If typhoid fever is prevalent, the number of typhoid carriers will be relatively high. If typhoid fever is rare, the number of typhoid carriers will be relatively low except as they may immigrate from the more infected communities.

How to deal with the typhoid carrier is one of the greatest problems before the modern health officer. Typhoid bacilli not only do not originate spontaneously from filth, sewage or decay, but die within a few weeks after being excreted from the human body. When typhoid fever is caused from water, milk or other foods, it is certain that the infected substance has been recently contaminated either from a typhoid patient or a typhoid carrier. If typhoid bacilli were only discharged by those suffering from the disease, the control of typhoid fever or even its complete elimination would be comparatively simple. The typhoid carrier is but rarely recognized and consequently cannot be avoided. He may be contributing to the sewage which contaminates your drinking water. He may be your neighbor or he may be a member of your own household. Remember the relation—filth, flies, fingers and food. Every person should be regarded as a potential typhoid carrier, and we should insist upon absolute cleanliness with our food and drink. Where such cleanliness cannot be absolutely assured, do not forget that boiling kills typhoid bacilli and boils everything that may harbor the infection.

NORWOOD GRANGE

Holds Successful Picnic Wednesday of Last Week.

Hon. D. E. McClure, Judge Mayne and Judge Harris Gave Interesting Addresses.

The grange picnic held at Norwood Wednesday was a grand success. The attendance was good. The speeches were instructive. The ball game was interesting throughout and the dinner was something to be remembered, and for hearty location, Norwood, on the shores of Lake Michigan, is only surpassed by the beauty of its picnic grounds—Van Pelt's birch grove.

George H. Van Pelt of Chicago, Charlevoix and Norwood, a worthy member of Norwood grange, was chairman of the meeting and introduced as first speaker, Judge F. W. Mayne. Hon. D. E. McClure of Muskegon, deputy master, state grange, followed. Mac is always a favorite in Charlevoix county and made a lot of new friends at Norwood. Judge Harris closed the speech making and kept the interest up until the close. All speakers discussed the leading question before the American people—reciprocity—and it was touched upon from all view points. Music furnished by the Misses Joliffe and others added to the entertainment of the program.

The ball game between Charlevoix and Northport was won by the former, score 7 to 3.

RECORD BREAKING CROWD PRESENT

Charlevoix's Labor Day Celebration a Grand Success.

RURAL CARRIERS HOLD CONVENTION

Everything Carried Out as Arranged by the Committee.

Addresses by Mayor Hampton, E. Warner and Judge Harris—Music by Boyne City and Charlevoix Bands.

The joint celebration of Labor Day and semi-annual convention of the Rural Mail Carriers association of Charlevoix, Antrim and Kalkaska counties held in this city Monday was a success in every way and highly creditable to the committee having it in charge.

Early in the morning the crowds began flocking to the city and from that time until night every foot came in loaded with people while the residents of the surrounding country turned out in vast numbers, making a record-breaking crowd.

Promptly on time the parade, led by the Boyne City Marine band, followed by the mayor, board of public works, common council, fire department, some business representatives and the Carpenter's Union, as well as the Charlevoix city band, passed through the principal streets of the city.

After dinner the crowd was called to order at the band stand, corner of Clinton and Bridge streets, where Mayor Hampton delivered the address of welcome, which was responded to by E. Warner of Central Lake. Judge Harris of Boyne City also delivered an address, which was well received.

Throughout the day the Boyne City Marine band furnished music to the crowds, and well sustained their reputation as the best band in northern Michigan. The Charlevoix city band was also in evidence and kept up their standing as a credit to the city. The U. S. life saving crew gave a fine exhibition on Round Lake.

The games were called according to program and resulted as follows: Tub race: 1st, Cook; 2nd, Scroggie.

Row boat race: 1st, Hamilton; 2nd, Hammond.

Gasoline launch race: 1st, Swails; 2nd, Bellingier.

Boys' foot race: 1st, Hamilton; 2nd, Krulik.

Men's race: 1st, Taylor; 2nd, Smith.

Tug of war was won by Fred Hull team.

Horse race: 1st, Johnnie Johnson; 2nd, George Driggett; 3rd, Joe King.

East Jordan won both ball games. The carriers met in the K. of P. hall and were called to order by President Brintnall of the association. The chief feature of the convention was an address by Postmaster Fitch of this city, on the different features of the postal service. Twenty five carriers were in attendance and all report having a splendid convention.

One of the pleasing features of the meeting was the presentation of a golden oak rocker to President Brintnall as a wedding gift.

Election of officers resulted in the choice of the following: President, R. A. Brintnall, East Jordan.

Vice-president, E. H. Thompkins, Manclona.

Secretary, F. A. Butler, Charlevoix.

Treasurer, R. Johnson, Central Lake.

The next place of meeting was left to the committee on location.

THEATRICAL

The Majestic has several features this week. Amiot & Caldwell were here the first half. The Connell Sisters will take up the last part of the week in singing, dancing and mimicry. The Wolgan and Moran pictures will be shown Thursday night.

"Alias Jimmy Valentine"

JIMMY VALENTINE, WARDEN HANDLER AND ROSE LANE.

CHAPTER VIII.
LITTLE knowing of the serious conspiracy that was forming but a few yards away behind the thick velvet curtains, Valentine gave verbal and mental battle to the detective. Already he was beginning to see that the way of the transgressor was hard not only while he was in the legal toils, but also after he became free and supposedly in a position to build a new life if he so desired. But Jimmy Valentine was only at the beginning of a knowledge of the conditions and trials and setbacks he must face, for so long as men make laws and administer them so long will the guilty and the innocent as well suffer and endure, sometimes justly and sometimes unjustly.
This also is a law of life.
Valentine went on to insist that he didn't know where Avery was, hadn't seen him since his release from Sing
Sing, was glad of it, didn't care

"That's a lie! You know where he is," where he was and didn't purpose to care. Of all this he was absolutely sure.
"Well," stated Doyle, "he held up a citizen—just three days after he got out, and I want him."
"And I'm to tell you where he is and you will send him up for highway robbery?" questioned Valentine.
"The man he stuck up may die."
"And you expect me to hunt him up and deliver him to you?"
"And you are going to. That's the odd part of it. And possibly I'll make an eyewitness out of you."
"It would be odd if I sent Avery away for life. It would indeed!"
"Then I'll slough you for that Springfield job," Doyle rose abruptly.
"Then you may as well do it now,"
said the other defiantly.
"No hurry. I've got a little work on the case yet, and I'll find you when I want you." Doyle's grin showed his teeth.
"I'm not going to run away."
"Look here, Valentine, this Avery isn't worth this. He's as wrong as ever lived. He'll cross you or any one else. I should think when a humbreds to blackjacking an old man that would put him out of your class."
"I don't know where he is. I don't know that he did blackjack anybody, and I wouldn't know him if I saw him."
"That's your spiel, eh?"
"That's the truth," Valentine rose as though to end the distasteful interview.

"I've thought it out," he finally said.
"He'll be back any minute, and I'm going her way. Yes, and if I do there's a chance that I may win her some day and be able to take her to my old home and my father and mother, who haven't heard of me for years. They didn't seem quite to understand me when I was a kid, boys, nor I them, but I can see now that they meant all right by me. I've learned it all from this girl, though she's almost a complete stranger to me."

Valentine's voice began to waver, and he inclined his face to one side to hide the evidences of the emotion that threatened to overwhelm him.

To Red Flanagan and Bill Avery the situation was a trying one, desperate indeed. One of them was all too young and inexperienced to execute alone the delicate, sure, nerve racking
"double" job of a safe looking sortie, the other was too old and feeble for anything but a berth as "outside" man, to detect approaching danger and give the warning thereof. They absolutely required the partnership of Jimmy Valentine.

Yet here was Valentine, as Avery described him in a reproachful whisper to Red: "Here he is, crazy stuck on a skirt, an' him th' only man in

HE WHISTLED THE WEAPON FROM AVERY.

America as can open a twelve bolt safe by the sense of touch. Alud! It th' limit for a gent-oo like him to waste his talents an' go on the square!"

Valentine faced his friends of the past.

"When did you see her—the girl?"
questioned Red Flanagan of him.

"Right here today," Jimmy Valentine's face brightened as he thought of her. "Met her father too. She said she would be back."

"And you think she'll come?" sneer-ed Red. "Why, we been here a half hour, and it's a cinch Doyle has reached her father."

Valentine gave a sudden start. Red inwardly rejoiced as he saw that his shot had taken effect.

"Doyle!" gasped the released convict. "I wonder if he—"

"You can bet on it," put in Avery.
"A little sympathy, Jimmy, that's all," suggested Red. "She just came to cheer you on the right path. Ain't you on?"

"Don't say that, Red. Don't you say that."

"It's a cinch Doyle has queued the play," went on Avery.
Valentine moved angrily at the speaker.

"It wasn't a play, Avery. I'll strangle you if you speak that way again."

Red was again scornful and said:
"Oh, rot! They're playing you, and you don't see it. And for being spoken nice to you're going to blow the softest graft a man ever had."

"I know what I'm doing," insisted Valentine, who began walking nervously up and down the floor.

"Yes, you do. If you had a cinch—I'd stick, and you know it, don't you?"
"I don't know anything about it."

Avery, catching a significant glance from Red, continued the shrewd attention. He lost faith in these two.

"But the two worn pink roses," he said excitedly, "and the guy with her gray hair and carried a gold beaded cane?"

"Yes."
"When you was talking to Doyle here and we was planted there," he indicated the portieres—"I saw them pass here going toward the depot."

Valentine stopped short in his nervous pacing. He gazed in astonishment at the old thief, who stood at one side of the room gripping the rim of a slouch hat, one that could be pulled down over the eyes, to partially conceal the face when the wearer was in a public place.

"They went to the station," Valentine gasped. "Then—they—are—notcoming—no—"

Red saw the impression Avery's words had made on his former pal.
He saw that possibly very little would now be needed to cause No. 1289 to return to the old ways with the old friends.

"Surest thing you know, Jimmy," he announced. "I saw them too. She had on a shimmering dress with pink flowers in her bonnet, and she looked perfectly happy, too, like she was glad to get away from this town."

The Difference

Between a Dollar Saved and a Dollar spent is just Two Dollars. Did it ever occur to you that way? It's worth thinking about.

Another difference is the feeling you have afterward. The Dollar saved gives you a feeling of pleasure. It may call for a little sacrifice for the time being, but afterward you feel better for having denied yourself and the Dollar is still yours—you can have it when you wish.

Gems Found in Feldspar.

In a number of the felspar quarries garnets, green tourmalines and aquamarines (beryl) of gem quality are found, but seldom in such quantity as to warrant mining for the gems alone. Mr. Bastin mentions a felspar quarry in Connecticut where some of the cavities that yielded gem tourmalines were as large as a bushel basket. At another quarry in the state a large transparent green tourmaline about seven inches long was found. This stone is now in the museum of the Wesleyan university, at Middletown, Conn. One pocket in the same quarry contained a large crystal weighing several pounds of pale blue to pale green color, the tint being similar to those observed in some aquamarines. Unfortunately this crystal was much shattered in the blasting, but the fragments have yielded a number of small cut gems of great beauty.—Geological Survey Report.

Largest of Flowers.

The largest of all the flowers of the world is said to be the rafflesia, a native of Sumatra, so called after Sir Stamford Raffles. This immense plant is composed of five round petals of a brickish color, each measuring a foot across. These are covered with numerous irregular yellowish white swellings. The petals surround a cup nearly a foot wide, the margin of which bears the stamens. The cup of the rafflesia is filled with a fleshy disk, the upper surface of which is covered with projections like miniature cows' horns. The cup when free from its contents will hold about twelve pints. The flower weighs about fifteen pounds and is very thick, the petals being three-quarters of an inch.

Rubber Substitutes.

In an effort to find a cheap substitute for rubber interesting experiments have been made with two bituminous minerals, claterite and tabylite. Material very similar to rubber can be produced, for which good wearing qualities are claimed when used in automobile tires and elsewhere. During the year 1909 other varieties of bituminous minerals, similar to claterite and tabylite were discovered. One of these, known as wiesgerite, is a soft, moist material about the color and consistency of liver, which turns black on exposure. Wiesgerite, which is somewhat high in sulphur, is claimed to be especially valuable for the manufacture of rubber substitutes.

Novel Use For Old Rails.

A novel use has been found for old steel rails in building the telephone line along the railroad in the isthmus of Panama. Set upright in concrete bases, these rails have been found excellent for use as telephone poles, and many of them are now doing duty in a climate where the ordinary wooden poles would be immediately destroyed by the ravages of tropical insects. The concrete prevents rotting at the base and provides such good support as to render unnecessary the use of bracing or guy wires.

Rust Proofing Iron.

Iron or steel may be made rust proof by boiling in one gallon of water to which are added four ounces of phosphoric acid and one ounce of iron filings. A black noncorroding coating is produced.

The Women's Exchange will hold a Rummage Sale all day Saturday, Sept. 9, at 231 Mason street. 361

DRAGON'S BLOOD.

India the Chief Source of Supply of This Valuable Gum.

Dragon's blood, which is used for coloring varnishes, as a medicine and in photo-engraving processes, is procurable from grocers and druggists in every bazaar in India. Both the false and true dragon's blood may be purchased in the Bombay market.

Sir George Watt says that certain canes and rattans when freshly cut contain a large quantity of a liquid which when evaporated produces a red resin. One of the best known qualities of the resin is sometimes called East Indian dragon's blood. This is mostly prepared from the fruits of several species of calamus found in the Straits Settlements. The gum exudes naturally from between the scales of the fruit and, being friable, is collected by shaking the fruit into baskets and then affixing the resin from the stems and particles of woody fiber, after which it is melted either by the heat of the sun or boiling water. An inferior quality is produced by boiling the fruit or by tapping the stems. The only Indian species hitherto reported as affording this resin is Draconarops kurianus. The false dragon's blood met with in Indian commerce is imported into Bombay from Sumatra, Penang, etc. The true dragon's blood, however, is procured from Socotra and is obtained by tapping the stems of several species of dracena, not calamus.

Other technical publications state that Canary Islands dragon's blood is the variety obtained from the celebrated dragon tree of Teneriffe and adjacent islands. Draconis draco. Very little of this now finds its way into European commerce, and the same can be said of Mexican dragon's blood, which latter is obtained from Croton draco.—Consular Report.

THE EARTH'S EROSION.

Enormous Amount of Matter Carried Away by Rivers.

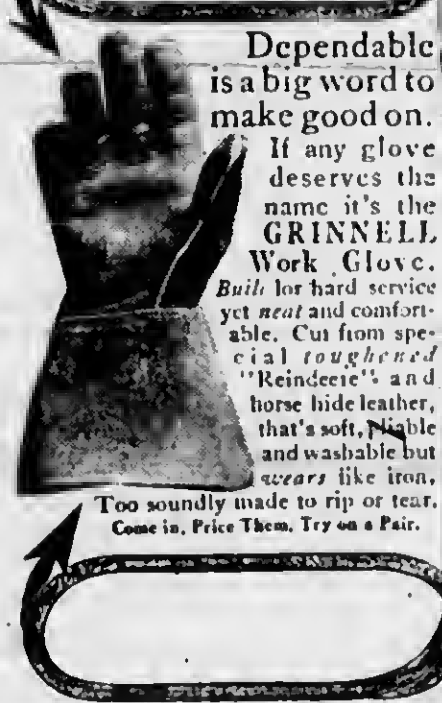

Investigations by the United States geological survey of the erosion of numerous drainage basins of the United States show that the surface of the country is being removed at the average rate of about an inch in 700 years. Though this amount seems trivial when spread over the surface of the country, it becomes stupendous when considered as a total or even in separate drainage basins. The Mississippi river, for instance, carries annually to the sea 136,400,000 tons of dissolved matter and 340,500,000 tons of suspended matter, and of this total the Ohio river carries 83,350,000 tons and the Missouri river contributes more than twice as much. The Colorado river, which has built up for itself a vast delta, takes down more suspended matter than any other river in the United States, delivering annually 387 tons for each square mile of its drainage basin, or a total of 100,740,000 tons.

The rivers of the United States carry to tide-water every year 270,000,000 tons of dissolved matter and 513,000,000 tons of suspended matter. This total of 783,000,000 tons represents more than 350,000,000 cubic yards of rock or 610,000,000 cubic yards of surface soil. If this erosive action had been concentrated on the isthmus of Panama at the time of American occupation it would have excavated the prism for an eighty-five foot level canal in about seventy-three days.

BURNING A BRIDGE.

Wooden Structure Destroyed by Electrically Heated Wires.

An interesting use of electricity was recently demonstrated in England, where a wooden bridge was cut down by means of electrically heated wires. The bridge had been condemned and was to be replaced by a steel structure supported on the old masonry piers and abutments. Three weeks were allowed in which to dismantle the woodwork, but it proved impossible to accomplish the work in so short a time without the use of dynamite or fire, which undoubtedly would have injured the masonry.

Finally an electrician proposed to destroy the bridge by the use of electricity. Each span of the bridge contained twenty-seven planks, and it was proposed to cut them so that they would drop into the water simultaneously, clear of the piers. The structure was wired, and sufficient current was employed to bring the wires to a cherry red. An hour and forty minutes after the current was applied the first span was cut and fell into the water. The operation was begun at 5 o'clock in the morning, and at 2 o'clock at night the structure had been demolished without injuring the masonry.—Scientific American.

Compass Needle as Heat Indicator.

In order to determine the most favorable degree of heat for hardening steel tools an ordinary compass can be used, according to the French magazine Cosmos.

As steel is heated it gradually loses its magnetic properties and is attracted less and less by the needle of the compass. It has been found that the degree of heat at which all magnetic reaction disappears coincides exactly with the temperature most suitable for hardening of drills, chisels, planer irons, etc. The tool is heated in the forge and held at a certain distance from a compass. If the needle deviates it is again heated until no deviation is observed, when it is immersed in the bath, as usual.

Electrolytic Sewage Purification.

Oklahoma City is now using an electrolytic apparatus for the purification of its sewage. This apparatus is similar to that installed at Santa Monica, Cal. The sewage is conducted through flumes, in which are placed sets of iron plates, each measuring ten inches by twenty-four inches by three-eighths of an inch. There are three flumes, each containing ten batteries of twenty-seven plates and capable of purifying 250,000 gallons per day. The current used is about one ampere per plate. The action of the current is to cover the plates with bubbles of hydrogen and oxygen, which attack organic compounds and destroy bacteria. The cost of operating the plant at 4 cents per kilowatt hour is $2.16 per day.

by the Colant Mining Co. When the mines were first opened the copper was separated with water and a great deal of hand work but as labor advanced this became unprofitable and the last run of ore was shipped to another mine about 20 miles distant where there is a smelter. We left Bruce Mines at 6:00 a. m., Monday, and headed through the North channel for Son, Mich., where we arrived at 10:30 a. m. We took in the sights for the rest of the day. A party went to the steel mills in the Canadian Soo, but were refused passage, but they could not afford to pay ferry and street car fares for nothing so they went to the opposite end from where the watchman was located and after getting thoroughly drenched with rain, worked their way in. When they got nearly through they met a watchman who asked for their passes and when informed they had none, he very cordially showed them the way out. They managed to get pretty well dried out while around the hot iron and felt paid for their visit.

We left the Soo Tuesday morning at 6:45 a. m. and arrived at Mackinaw City at 3:45 where we left the boat. During our trip we made stops at numerous islands, and caught plenty of bass until we were all sick of fish. At each place where we stopped the roll had to be called so that no one was left. The name of the association was decided as the "Arbutus International Outing Association."

The following is a list of officers: President, Olaf Nordstrom; Secretary, Charles See; Treasurer, Sam Smith; commissary committee, Oscar Smith.
Other members of the party were Amos Webster, Andrew Follon, Charles Burrows, Will Parmer, Amos Risk and R. A. Enney, besides the officers of the boat who were Capt. Wm. Schepler, Engineer Roy Ripley, Cook Will Martin and Lineman George Wilford.

LAWS RELATING TO GAME BIRDS

Revised Game Laws of 1911 Make Important Changes

FROM LAWS PREVIOUS TO 1910

Everything Is Being Done to Preserve Game as Much as Possible

Season Opens October 15—Fox, Gray and Black Squirrel Protected Until 1914—Other Changes Made

With the warm summer days changing to cooler autumn, those who make a practice of hunting every fall are more or less interested in what the laws have to say concerning what may and what may not be done in the bagging of Michigan game.

Some of the revised laws of 1911, make a few important changes in former laws and deal with some game that is nearly always killed in this section, therefore it will be well for local men to study up a little before entering too far into the hunting grounds.

The game in this section is getting scarce and everything is being done to preserve it as much as possible and at the same time allow all the hunting that will be consistent to proper preservation of wild game.

The Public Acts of 1911 contain a few amendments of the game laws that will be interesting to those who intend to pass a few October days with rod and line or dog and gun, trying to bag some of the choice game offered by the woods and lakes of the state of Michigan.

First it is unlawful to deface or destroy any notices posted on farms or woodlots. Birds or animals protected by law shall not be held captive with the intention of shipping beyond the state limits except for special reasons and under permit from the state game warden.

Act 275, section 8 says, the warden may on application and the payment of $10 issue permits good for the yearly game season, to land owners or bona fide members of clubs who own and maintain game preserves to carry as open hand-baggage during the season 20 wild ducks or other migratory birds lawfully killed, to their homes outside the state.

The injuring, killing, capturing, selling, or having in possession of each animal or bird, or any part thereof, sold or possessed contrary to the provisions of this act, shall be a separate offense.

For the above act the following shall be considered game: moose, elk, caribou deer, rabbits and squirrel (excepting red squirrel), geese, brant and wild ducks, rails, coot and gallinules, shore birds, snipe, woodcock, plovers and sandpipers, tatters and curlews, pheasants, grouse, prairie chickens and quail. All other species of wild resident and migratory birds shall be considered non-game birds.

Section 14 states that no person shall kill any non-game bird or destroy the eggs of these birds, English sparrows, blackbirds, crows, coopers, hawks, sharp shinned hawks and great horned owls are not included among the birds protected by this act.

Section 15 says: "No person or persons shall at any time make use of any pit, pitfall, deadfall, snare, trap, net, baited hook or any similar device or any drug, chemical or explosive for the purpose of injuring, capturing or killing any such birds or animals protected by the laws of this state, nor shall any person at any time in any manner whatever injure, destroy or rob any bird protected by the laws of the state, or molest, harass or annoy such birds upon their nest except under certain specified circumstances."

Section 17. "No person shall take, kill or capture in any one day more than the following of any of the game birds mentioned in this act: Quail, 10; partridge, (ruffed grouse) and spruce hens, 8; plover, 10; woodcock 6; snipe or other shore birds, 10; geese, brant and ducks, 25. No person shall at any time have in his possession more than the following number of any of the game birds mentioned in this act: Quail, 15; partridge, (ruffed grouse) and spruce hens, 15 in all; plover, 20; woodcock, 20; snipe and other shore birds, 20 in all; geese, brant and ducks, 25 in all. No person shall kill in any calendar year more than 50 of any kind of the following named game birds, to-wit: Quail, partridge, (ruffed grouse), spruce hen, plover, woodcock, snipe and other shore birds. No person shall during the open season of any calendar year, take, kill or capture more than two deer."

Deer may be killed from October 15 to November 30, inclusive; fox, gray and black squirrels October 15 to November 30, inclusive; rabbits, October 15 to March 1, inclusive; quail, October 15 to November 30, inclusive; ruffed grouse, October 15 to November 30, inclusive; spruce hens October 15 to November 30, inclusive; ducks, snipe, plover, woodcock, shore birds, rails and coots, October 15 to December 31, inclusive; geese and brant, October 15 to December 31, inclusive; provided that fox, gray and black squirrel shall not be hunted or killed until 1914.

Conviction of the first offense for violation of these laws will result in a fine of not less than $10 and not more than $100 and the costs of prosecution.

BIG BARGAIN AND PRIZE DAY

Will be Given at Charlevoix, Thursday, September 21

BY RETAIL MERCHANTS ASSOCIATION

Valuable Prizes for Products of Farm and Orchard

Will be Held in New See Block—Free Dance in the Evening—Carnival of Bargains and Fun.

Thursday, September 21, the Retail Merchants Association of Charlevoix will hold their first show and prize bargain day for this season.

Valuable prizes, (see list in the big ad in another part of this issue) will be given on farm products and every merchant in the city will have special bargains to offer in their lines for this day only. A big free auction of the exhibits will be held immediately after the awarding of prizes. The show this year will be held in the mammoth new See block, corner Bridge and Antrim streets, which will make a show room unsurpassed by any in this county.

This year, in addition to the prizes offered for farm products, special attractions have been arranged. The Charlevoix City band will furnish the music during the afternoon and a free dance will be given to the evening to which all are invited.

Come to Charlevoix, Thursday the 21st. Bring along with you the best products of your farm or orchard. Help swell the exhibit and show what Charlevoix county farms can do and while you are enjoying yourself don't forget to purchase some of the many bargains offered by Charlevoix merchants and make it a day of profit as well as pleasure.

DIED AWAY FROM HOME

OUR POPULAR VOTING CONTEST

The Courier Announces Big Event—Any Lady Can Enter—Merchants Join in Grand Gift Combination—Get an Early Start and Win a Good Prize.

When it became known that the COURIER intended to inaugurate a popular voting contest, interest began to develop and many are inspecting the plan with the view of aiding some friend in winning the handsome $400 Obermeyer Piano or some of the other prizes that are offered.

Many nominations will soon be in and votes will be cast.

Such valuable prizes as are offered are worth working for and will no doubt fall to the lot of the industrious, worthy and interested ladies who make an effort to win. A piano is the pride of any household and the fact that a number of other prizes not usually found in contests are being given away, make it doubly interesting.

The prizes given by the merchants in the list are fine ones and the contestants who make a good showing and fails to win the piano will be awarded one of the other valuable prizes.

Read the rules elsewhere in this issue or we will mail them upon request. Inspect the offerings of the merchants and learn how you may secure votes for yourself or friend. Be sure and ask the merchants for coupons.

A large vote is given upon subscriptions. Use the 25 vote coupon in this issue and cast it for some one, as it may be a starter of a winner. Fill out the nomination blank and send it or hand it to the publisher, as this act may be the means of helping some deserving lady to win a handsome piano or some of the valuable prizes enumerated in this list.

The contest is without doubt the biggest business getting enterprise that has ever been presented to the people in this section.

In this issue will be found a large display announcement concerning the contest also nominating blank and a 25 vote coupon.

Nominate some friend and send in the coupon.

While the COURIER enjoys a prosperous business, it is always reaching out for more and in our present method of helping others we hope in turn to help ourselves.

We expect to increase our subscription list at an exceedingly rapid rate, therefore benefiting the advertiser.

Remember that our merchants named below are interested in this contest and give a 25 vote coupon with every $1 purchase.

If you can't understand the rules of this contest, call or write to this office and we will be pleased to go over the proposition with you.

Merchants who are giving the coupons are as follows:

J. L. Crane, dry goods and carpets. C. R. Bellinger, jewelry, cut glass, etc.

Palace Clothing Store, clothing and furnishing goods.

Benj. Brown, harness, bicycles, trunks, etc.

Stanley Wildern, jewelry and music.

M. A. Levinson & Co., dry goods, clothing, furnishing goods, etc.

W. C. Bellinger, bazaar goods, souvenirs, crockery, etc.

G. W. Priest, photographer.

F. S. Blanchard, hardware, paints, oils and entery.

A. E. Mason, groceries and shoes.

F. G. Bellinger, jewelry and optometrist.

S. M. See & Sons, furniture, wall paper, rugs, etc.

ENJOYABLE AFFAIR

Informal Supper and Smoker at the Belvedere

Topics of Interest to City and Association Discussed

Monday evening a very pleasant gathering was held at the Belvedere, several of our business and professional men having been invited to meet the officers and members of the Charlevoix Summer Home association to talk over matters of mutual interest to our citizens and the association and enjoy an informal supper and smoker. About 40 of our business men were present. The gathering was called to order by Julius C. Birge, president of the association, who acted as toast master. Mr. J. W. Osborn, ex-president of the association, spoke first, and was followed by Mayor Hampton, Willard A. Smith, Mr. Bailey of Cincinnati, Dr. Thielen and Ex-governor Fifer of Illinois.

Taken altogether it was a very enjoyable affair and the discussion of topics of interest to both the association and the city generally, such as transportation, etc., will be of great help in fostering a better and more mutual understanding.

LANDED IN JAIL

Hotel at Boyne City Robbed Last Week

Prisoners Brought to the County Jail on Friday of Last Week

Landlord James Blake of the Riverside hotel, Boyne City, was out on a moon-chasing expedition last week.

Between three and four o'clock Tuesday afternoon, his hotel was robbed to the amount of $50, the boarders being the losers. The theft was not discovered until six o'clock in the evening. Mr. Blake at once reported the affair to the authorities and a search was started. Two boarders were suspected of the robbery, and they were followed to Boyne Falls and on south of the village for about two miles. Mr. Blake pursued the men personally, but on account of the intense darkness lost track of them.

Among the stuff stolen were two suits of clothes, two watches, a revolver and other small articles belonging to boarders of the house. One of the men was a regular boarder and the other a transient. Word was received from Mancelona, that two suspicious looking characters had been arrested there answering very much to the description of the fellows wanted. Under-sheriff L. Meeker of Boyne Falls went down to Mancelona and brought them back to Boyne City, Wednesday. They were identified by Mr. Blake as John Temple and Elmer Wrangle, the parties suspected of the theft.

They were promptly arraigned before Justice Shepard and pleaded guilty, for which they were sentenced to 30 days in the county jail.

The fellows made a complete confession and showed Landlord Blake where they had thrown some of the things they could not use. One of the suits was being worn. They were brought to jail Friday by Deputy Sheriff Houghton.

AUTOMOBILE ACCIDENT

R. W. Elston Victim of Bicycle and Automobile Mixup

R. W. Elston was the victim of an auto accident Friday, and while no bones were broken, Mr. Elston was quite severely bruised. Mr. Elston and Don Campbell were riding Campbell driving, when they met Andrew O'Brien on a bicycle. O'Brien seemingly lost his head and crowded the auto to the curb. To avoid striking him Campbell was forced over the curb throwing Mr. Elston out and badly damaging the machine.

CHARLEVOIX WATER

Recent Test Shows It to be of High Quality

Few Places in State of Michigan Where Water Tests as High

Health Officer Thielen recently sent a sample of Charlevoix water to Ann Arbor for analysis and has received the report from Professor Chester A. Stanley, who made the analysis.

Prof. Stanley reports that Charlevoix water tests far above the average of water sent in for examination by the different cities of Michigan. Several tests have been made of Charlevoix water but this is the best ever received. The test shows that the water in this city is perfectly safe in its present condition and is in no way responsible for the few cases of typhoid fever which we have had recently.

The health officer is diligently at work tracing out the cause of the cases and in the meantime advises the people not to use ice in their drinking water. A sample of the ice will be sent to Ann Arbor for analysis.

While we have always boasted of the purity and high class water supply furnished by our city, this added assurance that we have the best water in the state gives us cause to congratulate ourselves, and the vigilance of our health officers in tracing out the cause of the recent outbreak proves that in the future, as in the past, Charlevoix will continue free from epidemic diseases.

STRONG BANKING HOUSE

Charlevoix State Savings Bank Shows Remarkable Growth

This issue contains a copy of the statement of the Charlevoix State Savings bank, on page eight. It is interesting to note that its business has increased nearly $50,000 since its last statement, less than three years ago. Owing to the large cash reserve carried by this bank at all times, and the careful attention given its patrons by its management it is regarded as one of the strongest banks of northern Michigan.

Work on its new building will be started in a few days.

Another Business Change.

The grocery and meat business which has been conducted under the name of Block Brothers will hereafter be conducted under the name of Martin Block, Milton Block retiring from the firm. The firm of Block Brothers has enjoyed a good patronage and no doubt the new house will continue to gain new friends as well as keep its old ones.

Another New Paper.

The Boyne City Times is the latest addition to Charlevoix county newspapers. It is a bright sheet and a credit to its proprietor, Will H. Griffin, well known to Charlevoix citizens.

OVER TWO BILLION DOLLARS

Valuation of State as Fixed by State Equalization Board

The State Board of Equalization which met at Lansing recently increased the value of the state $1,734,100,000 to $2,250,000,000, an increase of $535,900,000 since the last meeting of the board in 1906. However this increase is $673,533,822 less than the valuation placed upon the state by the tax commission in its report filed last week.

With very few exceptions all of the counties will have to pay more taxes during the next three years than they have during the last five. Wayne county was boosted from $335,000,000 as equalized in 1906 to $500,000,000. The upper peninsula was raised from $274,800,000 in 1906, to $332,300,000 an increase of $58,100,000, the iron mining counties being substantially raised while the copper mining counties were reduced. Every county in the lower peninsula with the exception of Bay was boosted.

The following shows the changes in nearly all counties—Charlevoix being raised from $900,000,000 in 1906 to $900,000,000; Antrim, $7,500,000, 1906, $9,000,000, 1911; Cheboygan, $6,500,000, 1906, $9,300,000, 1911; Emmet, $900,000, 1906, 1908, $12,000,000, 1911.

THE BEST PROOF

Charlevoix Citizens Cannot Doubt It.

Doan's Kidney Pills were used—they cured.

The story was told to Charlevoix residents.

Time has strengthened the evidence.

Has proven the cure permanent. The testimony is from this locality.

The proof convincing. Mrs. John H. Smith, 327 Madison St., Petoskey, Mich., says: "I became badly run down as the result of many aches and pains I had, I could hardly endure the backaches and I was also subject to headaches. Nothing I took helped me to any extent until I chanced to learn of Doan's Kidney Pills. This preparation acted like a charm. I am now free from pain and feel well in every way, thanks to Doan's Kidney Pills."

Mrs. Smith gave the above testimonial in August 1900 and when interviewed on July 30, 1900 she added: "I still consider Doan's Kidney Pills to be an effective kidney medicine and I can recommend them as highly today as I did a few years ago. I have no hesitation in allowing the continued publication of my former testimonial."

Who Wins?

"Dear philosopher," writes a correspondent, "will you please settle a dispute for us? A and B make a wager as to which can 'shoot' the most rabbits. The contestants take different territories and hunt all day. At the time appointed they meet. A has no rabbits at all, but B has an animal which proves to be A's pet cat. Who wins?"

It is hard to decide this bet. In view of the fact that B gets not only A's cat, but his goat, we should say that A should buy the cave owners. Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Neighborhood Notes

There is a farmer in Montmorency county who is of the opinion that he was properly "dunc" in a recent deal whereby he purchased $50 worth of land from the state, and in a sarcastic letter to Deputy Land Commissioner G. R. Munshaw the ruralist indignantly demands that his money be refunded.

In the deed which the state gave to the purchaser there is a clause which reserves to the state, "its duly authorized officers, representatives and assigns, and its to their lessees, agents and workmen, and all other persons by its or their authority or permission, whether already given or in hereafter be given, at any time and from time to time, to enter upon said lands and take all usual, necessary or convenient means for exploring, mining, working or plying and taking away the said mineral, coal oil or gas."

It is not the fact that the state makes reservation of the coal, oil or mineral rights that brings a wail from the farmer, as he claims he does not wish to enter the mining business, but he objects to that clause which makes it possible for the state to enter upon his lands and trample down his crops. Inasmuch as much as the clause was in the application which the farmer signed before securing the rights to the land, it is not probable that the money will be refunded.

At the opening session of the Michigan Bean Growers' association it was predicted that the Michigan bean crop will total 5,400,000 bushels, with a value of $11,000,000. Reports from 31 counties of the state were to the effect that while a 10 per cent greater acreage has been devoted to the crop this year, the yield will be but 90 per cent of that of 1910. This will be due to the summer's drought.

Last year's output was 6,000,000 bushels, worth $12,000,000. Michigan raises about 65 per cent of the bean crop of the country, the white pea beans and red kidney beans forming the larger part of the amount.

Could a shot pipe placed in the pocket of a coat near a stick of dynamite explode the cartridge? Or would it be possible for it to explode if the bowl of the pipe rested against the stick of explosive and the man would fall, causing the pipe to come in violent contact with the dynamite? These questions have been asked seriously since the death of Frank McKaskle on his farm near Wallace, Monday morning by the explosion of a charge of dynamite. Mr. McKaskle left the house with the dynamite and it exploded before he arrived at the stump he wished to blow up. No one saw the accident—only his wife heard the explosion which killed her husband.

A Great Advantage to Working Men. J. A. Maple, 127 S. 7th St., Stenboville, O., says: "For years I suffered from weak kidneys and a severe bladder trouble. I learned of Foley's Kidney Pills and their wonderful cures so I began taking them and sure enough I had as good results as any I heard about. My backache left me and to one of my business, expression, that alone is a great advantage. My kidneys acted free and normal, and that saved me a lot of misery. It is now a pleasure to work where it used to be a misery. Foley Kidney Pills have cured me and have my highest praise." Frank N. Metcalf.

COMMUNICATED.

Charlevoix, Mich., Sept. 8, 1911. Dear Voter—This of great interest to you.

We are now in the midst of the third year of the prohibition of the liquor traffic in Charlevoix county. Whatever we may have thought of the law before we made the test, now we know it as an unqualified success as demonstrated in our own county. It is a success economically, socially and morally. We did not hesitate to try the experiment for we knew that conditions could not well be made worse than they were with the open saloon. The liquor dealers wanted to continue the saloon for the reason that the saloon greatly increased the sale and use of liquor. For that very reason the temperance people wanted to do away with the saloon, since temperance always seeks to reduce the sale and use of liquor. The saloon has no reasonable excuse for its existence. Wherever it flourishes it is at the expense of everything good in human society. The more it prospers the more widespread and deadly is the plague which it creates.

The original signers of the petition asking for the privilege of voting on the liquor question arrayed themselves against this nefarious institution. No man was ashamed of this position, for it meant that he stood for good citizenship, the morality and health of the youth and the sanctity of the home. Men could well afford to have it known that they belonged to a class that worked for the triumph of these noble ideals.

Now the liquor men are asking the voters to repudiate this position. They are asking that you help bring back the day of the open saloon with its treating system and its wholesale drunkenness. They ask for your signature to help bring this about. Voter, do you want to be drawn into a position that will make you a force in accomplishing this object? We do not believe you do. We trust you will think the matter over well before you consent to that which seeks to undo the splendid work that has been done under local option during the past two and one-half years. The court records tell a story which liquor men cannot honestly meet. They tell of a great decrease in business there, while business men tell of a corresponding increase of business in all the legitimate channels of trade.

The law requires copies of the petitions with the signatures thereon to be posted for ten days, at least in three public places in the township and city where the signers reside (see section 5115 of the compiled laws of Michigan 1897, Vol. 2, page 1710). We do not believe that you want your name to appear in public with the names of drunkards, gamblers and saloonists. You do not care to have it understood that you stand for the things which every one knows the saloon produces. The great majority of the citizens of Charlevoix county believe in protecting the home and fostering only good and helpful institutions. If it were necessary they would lay down their lives in a conflict that involved the integrity of their homes and the future of their children against an open enemy. The foe now faces us, not in the open, but under cover of an appeal, for the right of franchise for the purpose of bringing back an institution, the success of which is absolutely dependent upon its ability to multi loys for life and finally cast them off as wreck of humanity. Let us not be deceived by any pretended patriotism that has this nefarious object. The man who approaches with this object is from the enemy's forces. A little searching of the fields beyond will reveal the assembling army. Let us not sign a paper that may permit this foe to pitch his camp in our doorway.

Publicity Committee of County Local Option Association.

Foley's Kidney Remedy (Liquid) is a great medicine of proven value for both acute and chronic kidney and bladder ailments. It is especially recommended to elderly people for its wonderful tonic and reconstructive qualities, and the permanent relief and comfort it gives them. Frank N. Metcalf.

The last legislature defines a high school for the first time. One teacher must confine herself to not more than two grades of the 9th, 10th, 11th or 12th to be officially designated as a high school. The law recognizes both 10th grade and 12th grade high schools, and after a pupil from a country district finishes a 10 grade school the district from which the pupil came must continue to pay his tuition to a 12 grade school, if the pupil so elects.

The many friends of Roy S. Swinton, brother of Alderman Swinton, will be pleased with the following: Upon graduating from the University of Michigan, Mr. Swinton accepted a position as head of the manual training department of the Philippine university, located at Manila. Now he has been made head of the department of surveying. The Philippine university is a government institution. It is a school of high standard and ranks well up with the technical school in this country.

LARGEST IN HISTORY

State Tax This Year Will be $6,523,041.10

Auditor General Fuller Explains Where it Goes—Next Year Will be Smaller

For maintaining the government of the commonwealth of Michigan for a year, Auditor General Fuller is spreading a tax of $6,523,041.10 for 1911, as compared with $4,729,000.07 for the year 1910. The rate of taxation under the new equalized valuation will be $2.85 per $1,000 as compared with $3.42 for 1910, but this decreased rate is the result of the increase in the valuation and does not mean any decrease in the amount of taxes unless the valuation of the property has been increased by the assessors.

This is the largest tax apportioned in the history of the state of Michigan and viewing the figures causes speculation as to what the result would have been if Governor Osborn had not pared off many items and threatened others in case the legislature did not keep down the amount to figures proven to be absolutely necessary. Next year the amount will be smaller by a million or so, according to estimates made.

Among the items which go to make up this total tax are the three-eighths of a mill tax for the university and if one-tenth of a mill tax for the Agricultural college, which, being based on the equalization are larger, because of the increase in the total equalization just completed. The university will draw $55,000 an increase of $208,000, while the college will draw $228,000, an increase of $35,000 over the amount it drew last year. Through a legislative error the state industrial school for boys is left without an appropriation this year except $10,000 deficiency, the legislature having appropriated $90,000 for 1912 and $98,000 for 1913 instead of for 1911 and 1912. The school will have to be taken care of out of the general fund and a deficiency appropriation made by the next legislature.

The general purpose tax out of which the general expenses of the state are paid, amount to $2,000,000 for 1911, and is reduced for 1912 to $1,632,000.

Other large items in the tax budget include $976,981.70 for the asylums; for the highway department, $215,000; state normal college, $180,955; prisons, $134,000; national guard, $108,910; heating, power and electric lighting plant at the university, $280,000; legislature, $105,000; soldiers' home, $200,000.

JOKER IN GAME LAW

Dogs Must be Kept Out of the Woods by Hunters

One provision of the new game law will be a surprise to hunters in effect it makes it illegal to hunt partridges with dogs at least in the deer counties. Section 17 of Act No. 275 says: "No person or persons shall make use of a dog in hunting, pursuing or killing deer; the presence of a dog in the woods, hunting camp, logging camp or a club house during the deer hunting season shall be prima facie evidence of its illegal use. Any dog pursuing, killing or following upon the track of a deer is hereby declared to be a public nuisance and may be killed at such time by any person without criminal or civil liability. The force of the above is not apparent until one recalls that the open season for deer and partridge is the same from October 15 to November 30. If a dog in the woods during the deer season is prima facie evidence of the animal being used to hunt deer it is difficult to see how partridges can be hunted with dogs. Probably this unfortunate feature of the new game laws was an oversight on the part of the legislature but the laws appear to be clear that anyone who takes a dog into the woods this fall to hunt partridges does so at peril of arrest for illegal deer hunting.

CRANE'S

Ultra-fashionable corset styles this season call for the low bust and almost imperceptible incurve at the waist-line. They are made extremely long over the hips, giving that slender tube-like effect which smart dressers achieve.

W. B. Nuform Corsets are in the very latest style of correctness. They give the figure natural, slender and graceful lines, with only a hint of curve at the waist. The bust is gracefully modelled, and the hips most artfully subdued for the prevailing mode.

W. B. Nuform styles are thoroughly up-to-date. Material of superior quality, daintily trimmed. Binding guaranteed not to rust. Prices $1 up.

JIMMY VALENTINE, WARDEN HANDLER AND ROSE LAN

A SILENCE ensued. Valentine was plainly suffering from the blow. Then an expression of confidence came into Valentine's face. He seated himself on a sofa at the left of the room.

"She'll be back," he said. "You fellows are just like lazy Swedes. They always said women didn't amount to much. Guess that was because one of the barmarks at the Cheshire Cheese in London peached on him to the Scotland Yard bulls, and he had to make a quick getaway hidden under the coal in a freight steamer. But this girl is different from the kind of women you and I have known, boys. She saw there was something good in me, even when I wore the stripes, and she took me out of the reach of Warden Handler and 'solitaire'—'solitaire,' boys. Does that mean anything to you?" Valentine's voice rose higher.

"Yes, and she's going to do one thing more for me. She's coming back to help me start on the square."

Red stepped close to Valentine, gripped his arm and blazed determinedly into his ears: "You know she won't. You don't think a straight girl would stand for a crook like you, do you—you, with the coppers always after you on account of some of the old stuff we did? Don't kid yourself, Jimmy. It's no go."

"If any other crook had dreamed a dream like that, what a laugh it would be, but now you go, Red—you and Avery!"

Red rose quickly.

"What do you mean?" suspiciously.

The light of resolution shone in Valentine's eyes.

"I've quit," he said.

"What!" snapped Red and Avery together.

"I've quit."

"What about Doyle?" put in Avery.

"He's Henry on your mind, ain't he, Avery? I can beat Doyle."

"You ain't going to lose that coin!" Red got snickered out for an hour's work," yelled Red. "Seven thousand! If there's a dime!"

"Yes, I'll lose that."

"And a trip abroad to brace you up—a month in Paris?"

"Yes: I lose that, too."

Red went on excitedly, bending tensely toward Valentine:

"But you won't lose the old thrill of going into a bank just before dawn."

"AND BEING THE OLD SAFE OPEN UP LIKE AN OYSTER," landing the watchman and feeling out a combination in the dark?"

"And hearing the coppers pass and try the door?" reminded Avery eagerly.

"And seeing the old safe open upon like an oyster and grabbing the dough?" said Red alluringly.

"And make a clean getaway?" followed Avery.

"And the long jump and the landings. In at a swell cafe, Jimmy-eating the breakfast of the milliouaire!" sang out Red.

"With the coin in your klek?" added Avery.

"And removing the papers and laughing our heads off at what suckers we made of the coppers—you ain't going to lose that, Jimmy?" Ned pleaded, with every ounce of effort he could control.

Indecision had begun to show in Valentine's face, and now his surrender was complete.

"You got to me, Red," he announced, then added eagerly: "Where is the layout you got? Cau we get to it to night?"

"Sure! It ain't two hours from here."

"It's a cinch," commented Avery delightedly.

Jimmy Valentine had surrendered indeed. His two one-time accomplices had cunningly played on his weakness for the tricks of the "crooked game." The thrills at it to him were more precious than the rewards. They were his rewards. Besides, the girl had not returned. She had paid the debt she owed to her rescuer, and that was all. Well, let her go, reasoned Valentine. Never again would he commit the folly of placing faith in a straight razor.

"Walt!" he cried. "My hands are pretty tough. I couldn't feel the tick of grandfather's clock the way they are now, but I can heat that. I can sandpaper them down till I can feel that pulse in a dead man's wrist. Where's the?"

"We got him," whispered Bill Avery excitedly to Red. "We got him, and he'll stick."

Hardly had Jimmy Valentine made his declaration to again join interest with Red Flaungan and Bill—Avery than a bellboy entered the parlor, paying the name of "Mr. Valentine." Jimmy stepped forward hastily, seized an envelope bearing his name which the boy carried and excitedly tore it open. He found a brief note written in feminine penmanship. He read these words, and the color surged to his cheeks:

Please don't leave him! I return, I inclose you a note Mrs. Webster asked me to give you. We saw her at the depot when we went to reserve sleepers tonight. ROSE LANE

"What is it?" asked Avery, drawing near. "Something from Doyle, I bet."

"Yes, what is it?" questioned Red.
"It is the return of hope," answered
Valentine, his emotion causing him voice to shake.

"You've weakened again?" sneered
Red.

"No; I'm strong again."

"You mean that 'a from the girl'?"

"She is coming back, Red, and there's nothing on this earth or in heaven that can make me go wrong. You said a minute ago that if you thought
I had a chance you'd stick."

"I said it."

"Then I baid you to that."

"Good God!"—exclaimed Avery.
"You're not going to turn square, to that?"

"I'm going with Jimmy. If I'd do n bit for him I got to go if he asks it."

"What am I goin' to do?" asked Avery plaintively.

Valentine drew close to him.

"I've got you a job, Bill, a good one," he unannounced.

"Me a job! Where?"

Valentine read from a note Mrs. Moore had left with him.

"Listen," he said. "This will introduce the man you promised the position as watchman of one of our grain elevators. The wages at $2.50 a day are satisfactory to him."

Intense disgust spread over Bill Avery's face.

"Two-fifty a day," he sneered. "A man can't live on that."

Valentine laughed.

"It costs 31 cents a day to keep a man in Sing Sing," he reminded the thief.

"I don't want a job," snarled Avery. "Only the sneekers work for a living."

"Yes, you do want one," returned Valentine, "and this is just your kind of a job."

Avery. "And let me tell you something that you think I don't know. You're tired of being a crook—tired to death—I knew that when we were in the hole. But you are afraid of what a lot of old pulps will say. Well, let them say. What they got? Did you ever see a crook with anything? What do they amount to? They haven't the stuff to brag of a house dog. You're tired of it, Bill, and ashamed of the years you've lost and I know it. Now here's your chance, your day of salvation. There's the letter and there's the coin to get there." He handed Avery some bills. "It's way out west where no one knows you, and you've got it chance. Just think, back to mother and then ahead to—"

"The hardened look began to fade from the thief's face. "Give it to me." He clutched the money in his hand. "I'll try, by God. I'll try." Tears trickled down Avery's prison-pained cheeks. —"That's the talk—that's the heart," spoke Valentine sympathetically. —"And if I fail I'll end it," said Avery. —"You won't fail. It's only the suckers that fail. Make the next train-bent Doyle. Get away."

Avery turned toward one of the entrance transees.

"Goodby, Jimmy. Goodby, Red," he cried, and he was gone.

"I tell you, Red," said Valentine looking after him, "there isn't a crook you know who wouldn't go straight if he could."

"God," exclaimed Red feelingly. —"but you know what's inside of a man."

"I know what's inside of me, and I don't care for it."

Jimmy Valentine crossed to a window and peered out into the street. No one in sight that he knew, yet he had lost all doubt that Rose Lane would return. Her message had calmed his fears, and, more than that, it had been in the time when he was thrusting aside the one chance in the world to redeem his lost years.

Another thought rose strong within him as he returned to the sofa, seated himself and saw Red standing disconsolately near the table. Something had to be done for Red—that was certain. Red Flanagan was young—barely twenty-five years—he had many characteristics that were his chance. Valentine was convinced that his friend would remain loyal to him if he could take him with him and that he would become a man of honor and integrity if he received the proper endo this man to let him give him a chance, the chance that would turn out to be the best in the prison. If they could maintain it.

And so he resolved that he would take Red with him wherever he went, if possible to arrange it. Together they would hew a way out of the morass of degradation and misery into which they had been plunged.

Red had been unfortunate in his early environment. Here lay the cause of his lawbreaking career. Left an orphan in a crowded tenement on the east side of New York City at the age of thirteen, he had been taken care of by his uncle, a retired police captain who operated a gambling house in Four years later Red was placed in charge of the buffet in this establishment, which occupation he followed until a new district leader was elected. One night during horse show week the sound of lusty air blows from the armored front door struck terror into the hearts of the employees and the fashionably nifted players of faro, roulette, baccarat and poker.

The lad's truthful testimony at the trial which followed so enraged his uncle that Red no longer found a home with him. Cast on his own resources, he was attracted by the glitter terling promises of an expert poker and faro dealer whom his uncle had employed. He learned the rules of the card game, counting stonemason's string in "the gambler in poker" games with the passengers and exchanging signals with him concerning the cards they held. He learned the art of denning the corners of the ace of spades, kings and queens and jacks with his thumb nails so that in dealing with fingers sandpapered or worn almost to the bleeding point with pumice stone he could detect these indications and know and to whom he was dealing the high cards. From this it was only a step to a partnership with the great Jimmy Valentine, the man who could "cop a gopher" without any artificial aids.

All this was well known to Valentine. He himself had drifted into the company in a manner somewhat similar. He could see in the lessons of his own experiences that Red's misdeeds were not entirely blameworthy.

He was about to Inform Red of his intention to aid him in a new career when he heard in the corridor the voice of Rose Lane addressing someone he believed must be her father. "Here she is, Red," whispered Valentine, rising quickly. "You must keep out till they go." But too late. At that instant Rose Lane entered, followed by her father. They saw Valentine standing by a suspicious looking figure.

Valentine, realizing that he was on the verge of absolute ruin in the estimation of the girl and her already suspicious father, for he could hardly explain Red's presence, turned coldly

"I'm very sorry, sir," he said in "different tones, "but I don't know the man you are inquiring for. Never heard of him. Guess you had better inquire of the clerk at the hotel office."

Red, catching the hint, replied: "Thank you, sir; I will do so," and went out of the room, concealing a grinning face behind his hat.

Between a Dollar Saved and a Dollar spent is just Two Dollars. Did it ever occur to you that way? It's worth thinking about.

Another difference is the feeling you have afterward. The Dollar saved gives you a feeling of pleasure. It may call for a little sacrifice for the time being, but afterward you feel better for having denied yourself and the Dollar is still yours—you can have it when you wish.

We make it a part of our business to urge you to have a bank account. Have an account at this bank, for it not only helps our business but yours more so.

Grange Column

Ironton Grange No. 707.

Ironton Grange met September 6, with a small attendance on account of rain.

One application was received for membership.

Lecturer's program consisted of song by Brother Coblenz and reading by Brother F. J. Hammond.

Under good of the order it was decided to hold a special meeting September 8, for the purpose of appointing assistant committee for plowing match.

Special meeting held September 8 with a good attendance. Brother Peter Kapdson gave a report of the committee on grain and vegetables for the fair exhibit. Brother Clark gave an interesting report of the committee on fruit.

The committee on plowing match were authorized to appoint their own assistants.

The grange voted to stand the expenses of the committee on fair exhibits. It was decided to hold the plowing match October 5.

The motion in regard to dancing was rescinded and there will be a dance on the evening of the plowing match.

The committee on plowing match appointed the following assistants: Prize Solicitors, Brothers Harry Coblenz and Jean Lewis; Amusements, Brothers Frank Hammond and Joe Courier; Dance, Will Steinburg, John Knudsen and Will Meggison.

Sister Cora Hammond, chairman Woman's Work committee requested all ladies to meet at the hall September 19 and finish some of the sewing.

Grange closed in form to meet again September 19.

Bills for the plowing match will be distributed later.

Wilson Grange No. 719

Wilson Grange met in regular session Saturday, September 9, 1911 with an attendance of about 40 members and one visitor.

Worthy Master George Jaquays called the meeting to order and filled the vacant offices. During the business session a number of bills were presented and allowed.

Two candidates were initiated in the first and second degrees. The grange voted to hire $100 to help in the completion of the new dining hall. It was voted to hire a carpenter, and as many other men as needed to push the work on the building forward. The dance committee reported $10.50 being taken in from the last dance and the ladies reported $5.40 taken in from the ice cream served at the dance.

After the business session an interesting program was furnished by different members. The Ladies' auxiliary announced their next meeting with Sister Amy Smith on Wednesday, September 20.

Grange closed to meet again in two weeks.

SPRAYING REQUIRED BY LAW

Colorado Law Which Would be a Good One for Michigan

The following laws taken from an article in the Orange Judd Farmer on fruit raising in Colorado would be equally applicable to Michigan.

Under the laws of Colorado each orchard owner is required to spray his apple trees two or three times with an arsenical solution, for the extermination of codling moth, and with lime and sulphur and tobacco solutions, as may be needed, for the destruction of aphids and other pests. This entails an expense of from $2 to $6 per acre per year, according to the size of the trees, but it gives the assurance that the man who gives his orchard good care will be protected from injury through the indifference or ignorance of his neighbor; for there is an orchard inspector in each county where any considerable amount of fruit is grown, whose duty it is to inspect every tree before it is planted, and condemned if it is infected with any disease or infested by any pest. It is also his duty to see that every orchard is properly sprayed. If the owner fails or refuses to do his spraying, the inspector has it done, and the owner must pay the cost and expenses of the work.

PERMANENT HEADQUARTERS

Noble of the Mystic Shrine Investigating Charlevoix

Will Purchase Five Thousand Acres and Build City

At the last national gathering of the Imperial Council Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, it was decided to procure a permanent site for the headquarters of the distinguished order and a committee was appointed to make investigations of possible sites in various states, the idea being to locate the headquarters as near the center of population as possible. It has been determined by previous experience that few cities have been able to accommodate comfortably the annual convention of the order and afford the facilities desired. It has been concluded, therefore that a permanent site should be established where headquarters of the order may be maintained and a convention hall of sufficient capacity erected.

Michigan has been included in the states to be investigated and Charlevoix one of the objective points. The committee which consists of Fred A. Hines, Los Angeles, Calif.; former imperial potentate, chairman; John W. Boyle, Ulica, New York; Frank C. Ronney, Chicago; George W. McGandless, Pittsburgh; and Edwin Delarr, Norman, Oklahoma arrived in Charlevoix today and are looking over proposed sites in this locality. Accompanying the committee, besides the railroad officials mentioned, are the following prominent Michigan Shriners: Lou B. Windsor, Reed City; L. A. Cornelius, Grand Rapids; James E. McGregory and William P. Perett, Detroit.

The plans of the party include investigation at Muskegon, Traverse City, Petoskey, Manistee, Ludington and Charlevoix.

It has been decided that a tract of 5,000 acres would be needed and the lake region of Michigan, with its endless healthful and scientific attractions close to commercial centers, has appealed strongly to the committee.

This plan is one of the most stupendous ever undertaken by any fraternal organization and the locality which secures it will be very fortunate.

Plants That Like Cold. Climate affects the inhabitants of the sea just as it does those of the land. As arctic land plants cannot flourish at the equator, so in the Arctic and Antarctic oceans marine plants are found that are unable to survive in warm water.

Among the most remarkable of these cold water plants are the laminariae, a kind of seaweed, which sometimes attain a gigantic size, exceeding in length the longest climbing plants of the tropical forests and developing huge stems like the trunks of trees.

Investigation has shown that these plants flourish in the coldest waters of the polar seas and that they are advanced farther from their "summer temperature" in the limits of "summer temperature" in the ocean. The genial warmth destroys them, just as a polar blast shrivels the flowers of a tropical garden.

BOOKSHELF FOR MOTHER.

Any Boy Handy at Carpentering Can Do It and Wait For Christmas.

In almost every household there is some one who is handy with tools, says the American Agriculturist.

To prove its assertion it prints the following story by James B. Duncan and a picture that shows the result of painstaking effort.

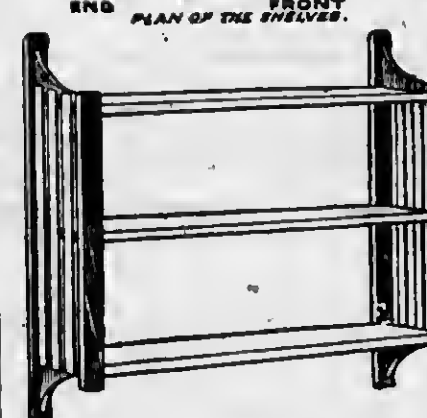

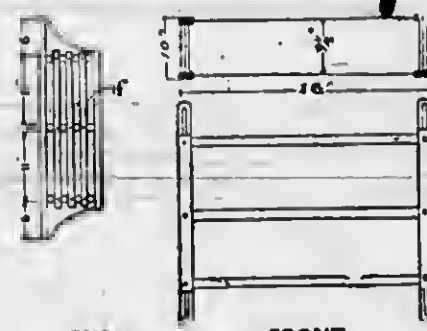

A bookcase large enough to hold 100 books is an adornment to any household, and the youngster who is clever, enough to gather in some nice bits of pine wood and then tuck the tool box in the barn will be sure to have something extra from mother in his Christmas stocking.

Here are the rules to follow:

In the use of all edge tools, if you would avoid cracks and splitting, be patient and do not attempt to remove wood too rapidly, although the tools should be always kept with perfectly sharp edges. There is much marking out to do, and as this must be accurately done a good sharp pencil should always be at hand. In sandpapering it is best to wrap the paper around a block, as the result is more uniform than when the paper is supported by the hand alone.

The three shelves, which are identical in every particular, should be smoothly finished, giving particular attention to the ends, as these are visible through the side strips. In order to fit around the four corners of the uprights, the four corners of these must be notched out. These uprights, after having been cut to length, should be smoothly finished and the corners rounded down very lightly with sandpaper, should have the location of the shelves marked on them and then have the holes bored for the screws. From half inch wood cut out four brackets of such a length as to fit closely between the two uprights of each end. Six little side strips, measuring one-fourth by one inch, are required, which should be flat on top and pointed at their ends.

In assembling make a hole in the corner of each shelf and carefully try the screws so as to make sure that they will not split the shelf when driven home.

A PRESENT ANY BOY CAN MAKE FOR MOTHER.

Place the brackets in position and secure them by glue and a small wire nail at two of the corners. In attaching the side strips use nails with large ornamental heads in the desired finish. To conceal the heads of the screws in front similar nails should be driven in as close to the screws as possible and directly above them. If preferred wooden buttons may be set over the head of each screw and held by means of glue. In order to hang these shelves a small hole should be bored in the upper ends of each of the back uprights.

These shelves require the following pieces of dressed lumber: The shelves, three pieces 1 by 9, by 37 1/2; back uprights, two pieces 1 by 2 by 35; front uprights, two pieces 1 by 2 by 24 1/2; side strips, six pieces 1/4 by 1 by 24 1/2.

MASSAGE YOUR CROPS.

Experiments Abroad Show That Plants Love Electricity.

There is a field of wheat near Evesham which is like no other field of wheat in England, says the London Graphic.

Up north, at Balmakewan, however, there is a field of oats which looks very much like it. On both these fields there are rows of rough telegraph poles, about seventy yards apart and some hundred yards between the rows.

On the top of each pole is an insulator ten times the size of those seen on ordinary telegraph poles. The insulators carry the usual telegraph wire, and extended between the rows there are strands of thin wire, fastened to the telegraph wire, about ten yards apart.

Very soon there will be a difference, perfectly visible to the passerby, between the part of the crop which is below the wires and the part which is not. The difference is due to discharges of electricity from the curious network. It is connected to a wire which runs to a little shed and from that shed to a dynamo at the farm.

But it is what happens in the little shed that matters. The current from the dynamo is transformed to high tension and rectified by Sir Oliver Lodge's well known valves. They look rather like glass fire extinguishers, and they glow in various tints.

There are about twenty-one miles of wire on the induction coil. Although it is easy to produce in the shed the lightnings and cracklings associated with wireless telegraphy, nothing ordinarily happens but a slight stinging and a much greater generation of ozone than is pleasant.

The field wires are kept running at the high tension of 100,000 volts. Working below the network bareheaded one feels a sensation as if brushing against spider webs.

For five years now this "crop shocking" has been going on.

The result seems to have been in the case of wheat at Evesham an increase in crop of from 25 to 30 per cent. Last year the increase was not more than 25 per cent, but the electric discharges had been much weaker than in previous years. At Balmakewan there has been a marked difference in oats.

Experiments have also been conducted with strawberries and tomatoes at Evesham, again with encouraging results as to yield. One year the electrified strawberries were found to be much sweeter than usual.

Any one who has a dynamo or access to an electric cable could begin experiments in electrification on between five and ten acres at an expenditure of about $500. To deal with sixty acres the expenditure would be about $1,000. Apparently what electrification does is to give the plants a kind of electrical massage. The discharges are not needed on fine, sunny days, but in dull weather they take the place of sunshine.

Of course the whole problem of the nutrition of plants is obscure. It is perfectly clear that this discharge of high tension electricity has done something to the crops treated, but what exactly it is by some doubt.

So far there is no evidence of shocked plants suffering from premature exhaustion due to overwork. Indeed, there is some reason for believing that the effect of electrification is to give the plant tone and go.

An American worker has shown that electrical discharges help the micro-organisms of the soil, so electrification may be doing something in that direction too.

Attack on Work of Development Bureau is Denounced

At Meeting in Cadillac—Grand Rapids Show Will be Biggest Display of Fruit Ever Shown in State.

The West Michigan Press Club and the Directors of the Western Michigan Development Bureau held an enthusiastic meeting at Cadillac last week.

In calling the meeting to order, President Day of the bureau said, "The first Michigan Land and Apple Show at Grand Rapids the second week in November will be the finest display of Michigan fruit ever gathered together. The Bureau, in order to concentrate its energies on this show, has withdrawn from the Chicago Land Show where it has been a big feature the last two years, and as a result I have been notified that papers are to be served upon me when I go home in a suit by summons for $1,000 damages. This suit isn't worrying us a bit. It simply shows how important our display is. Naturally Chicago doesn't want to lose it to Grand Rapids."

I wish we could get every farmer, fruit-grower, business man and supervisor to visit the Grand Rapids show. It would demonstrate to them just what the bureau is accomplishing in its campaign of education and development. President Day also said that he was going to supply the interior decorations from his own forest. The hall will be a miniature white birch forest.

The attack made upon the bureau by Mr. Squires of Mason county before the state tax board at Lansing was taken up and denounced as absolutely misrepresenting the work of the bureau. Secretary Gibson, in speaking of the attack, emphasized again the fact that the board is not organized for profit, does not deal in real estate in any manner, and has for its chief object the development of Western Michigan along educational lines.

"Our work is the purest and noblest undertaking ever attempted in the state," insisted President Day, "and it is a shame to have it attacked in this way. It wouldn't be so bad if the attack were based on truth."

The matter of raising finances for the work of the bureau was discussed and directors from the various counties made their reports. Director Payton, in reporting Charlevoix county, spoke of the vast increase in real estate transfers, and how the literature of the bureau was attracting settlers from other states. The directors agreed that the work of the bureau was having the effect desired by bringing in new settlers and in impressing upon present settlers the opportunities awaiting them at home by the use of proper agricultural methods.

At the joint session the matter of boosting Canada through ready to print service was discussed. Perry T. Powers, in discussing the subject said, that the activity of the Canadian boosters should serve as a spur to Western Michigan enterprise and provoke greater energy in impressing upon the people of the state and upon outsiders the advantages awaiting them in Western Michigan.

The display made by the bureau at the Kalamazoo, Grand Rapids and Cadillac fairs were among the most interesting features and after the fair season closes in Michigan will be taken to Ohio and Indiana for exhibition.

Cadillac comes in for high praise for the manner in which she entertained her guests.

CHANCE TO SAVE MONEY

Decision of Interest to Holders of Unrecorded Mortgages.

Owners of unrecorded mortgages on which a portion of the principal has been paid, will save money by bringing them out for record and paying the tax prior to January 1, according to an opinion of Attorney-General Kuhn, who holds that unless such mortgages are recorded and the tax paid, these mortgages may be taxed after January 1, for the full amount of the principal, regardless of the amount which has been paid.

The law provides a penalty for failure to comply with any of the provisions.

CALLED SUDDENLY

Mrs. Caroline Nicholls Died Sunday About Midnight.

Had Been Resident of Charlevoix for Thirty-Five Years.

Mrs. Caroline Nicholls, wife of Hon. John Nicholls, of this city, died quite suddenly Sunday evening about twelve o'clock. Mrs. Nicholls had been ailing for some time and had been quite feeble for over a year but had been able to get around.

Sunday, when retiring for the night, she fell over on the bed and except for a few minutes, was unconscious until death occurred.

Caroline Esterly was born in Williamstown, Wayne county, New York, July 22, 1835, and moved with her family to Wisconsin about 1849. In December, 1834, she was married to C. C. Lewis at Whitewater, Wisconsin. Four children were born to this union. Two died when quite young. The other two were Fremont E. Lewis and Mrs. Darwin E. Neech. Mr. Lewis died in Chicago early in 1870.

In 1871 she was married to John Nicholls at Whitewater, Wisconsin. To this union was born one son, Dr. John Nicholls at Whitewater, Wisconsin. The family moved to this city in 1876.

She is survived by her husband, one daughter, Mrs. Darwin E. Neech, three sisters, Mrs. Page of Whitewater, Wisconsin, Mrs. Crites and Mrs. Chamberlain of San Jose, California, and one brother, George W. Esterly of Washington, D. C.

Mrs. Nicholls was a member of the Congregational church and was a lady who in the highest degree, typified the best in American womanhood.

The funeral will be held tomorrow (Thursday) at the Congregational Church, Rev. H. A. Putnam officiating.

GOT NINETY DAYS

Albert Coucher Sent Up for Violating Liquor Law.

William Lemnier was arraigned in circuit court this morning, charged with violating the liquor law and pleaded not guilty. He was released on $400 bonds to appear on the first day of court next term.

Albert Coucher pleaded guilty to the same charge and was at once sentenced to 90 days in the Detroit House of Correction and to pay a fine of $1.00 and $25.00 costs, fine and costs to be paid within three hours or to serve an additional 30 days in Detroit. The fine and costs were paid and he will be taken to Detroit tonight. Coucher, together with Lemnier, was brought here from East Jordan by Sheriff Robbins Saturday night.

THE COURIER VOTING CONTEST

Make Your Nominations for the Voting Contest Today So That Your Choice Gets an Early Start in the Race—Cast Your Ballots at the Courier Office—Be Sure to Get Voting Coupons on Cash Purchases at the Stores Represented in the Contest—First Count Will Take Place October 18th.

The big prize voting contest which commenced September 14, and was announced in the Courier last week is creating considerable interest right from the start. The nominations of contestants is being made and soon there will be many working for a fine Obermeyer & Son piano and the other valuable prizes offered by the Charlevoix merchants. All of these prizes are called attention to on another page and they will be awarded to some of the ladies of Charlevoix and adjacent community. The question is, "How can I get it?" All that is necessary is to get your relatives and friends to trade with the merchants who are donating prizes in this popular voting contest. For each one dollar spent with the merchant you will receive 25 votes, which can be voted for any of the contestants; also get your friends to subscribe for the Charlevoix Courier. For each one year new subscriber you will receive 600 votes. Votes may be cast in an official ballot box which is placed in the Courier office, the keys to the box being in the hands of the awarding committee, whose names will be announced in another issue of this paper.

Use the free vote coupon in this issue. If you know of any lady who has not been nominated and whom you think would make a good race use the nominating blank below and send her name to the Courier office, or bring it in person and her name will be entered. It matters not if she is married or single, but must be fourteen years or over. This is a popular contest; not necessarily a young lady voting contest.

Read the rules elsewhere in this issue or we will mail them upon request. Inspect the offerings of the merchants and learn how you may secure votes for yourself or friend. Be sure and ask these merchants for coupons as the first count will be made on October 18. Do it Now, and help someone to reap the benefits of this most liberal offer.

Remember that many of the merchants of Charlevoix are interested in this contest and give you a 25 vote coupon with each $1.00 cash purchase.

Remember to have your friends trade with merchants who are giving the coupons.

Those who do not understand the rules and regulations of this contest, can call at this office, or write us, and we will be pleased to go over the proposition with them.

Get busy and vote for your choice. This contest will be conducted squarely and no partiality will be shown to any one.

This is a contest between individuals and no lodge or other organization will be permitted to enter. This also means that no lady will be permitted to stand as candidate of any particular organization, with the understanding that if she wins, the piano or other prize is to go to that organization. Such an arrangement would be unfair to the other contestants. Any candidate so detected will be disqualified.

Nominating—blank and 25-vote coupon will be found on first page. The following ladies have been nominated up to the time of going to press:

LIKES MICHIGAN

Mystic Shrine Very Much Impressed With This Section.

A Detroit dispatch says: The special committee of the Imperial Council, Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, headed by Fred A. Hines of Los Angeles, past imperial potentate, as chairman, which was appointed to select a site for a permanent Mecca for the order, has returned to Detroit after a strenuous week's trip in the northern part of the state, where they looked over various sites.

On the entire trip the committee occupied a special train tendered by the Pere Marquette railroad, and were accompanied by General Passenger Agent Moeller. It is known that they looked over sites at Muskegon, Traverse City, Petoskey and Charlevoix.

"No one could visit your northern country and not be impressed with its beauty and natural advantages," said Mr. Hines. "Michigan is blessed with everything that a man could wish for his comfort and enjoyment and you are centrally located. I violate no confidence when I say that Michigan is receiving serious consideration. Beyond that I cannot go."

CENTRAL LAKE FIRE

Central Lake Lumber Company's Plant Totally Destroyed

Loss Over $18,000—Partly Insured—Will be Rebuilt

The Central Lake Lumber Company's mill at Central Lake was totally destroyed by fire Thursday morning with a loss of $18,000, partly insured.

The origin of the fire is unknown and probably will never be known, the only plausible theory is that a spark from the smoke stack dropped and was carried into the planing room and set fire to the piles of dry heading there. Fred Donaldson, the night watchman, had just finished eating his midnight lunch and went into the boiler room and fixed up the fire. He thought he smelled smoke and stepped into the planing room where he discovered the heading piled there to be on fire. He tried to put it out with the mill's own fire apparatus but it could not be used.

The work of rebuilding will begin at once.

ODD DROWNING

Mystery in the Drowning of Captain Warner of the Dorothea

Mysterious circumstances surround the drowning of Captain Frank G. Warner, twenty-eight, commander of the Dorothea, Ohio's naval militia ship, off the Ninth street pier at Cleveland last Friday. Warner is said to have tumbled out of a small rowboat without being noticed by two men, who also occupied the boat. These men gave an alarm following the discovery of the accident and then disappeared. The police are looking for them.

The Dorothea was to have sailed from Cleveland harbor next Sunday on its last cruise of the season. Captain Warner, it is said, put off from the Ninth street pier early last Friday in company with two civilians who were to be his guests at an inspection of the boat. The Dorothea lay half a mile off shore.

KOTESKY--ECKSTROM

Popular Eveline Teacher Marries Horton's Bay Farmer.

A pretty wedding occurred at the home of Mr. and Mrs. John Ekstrom of Eveline township, when their daughter, Ruth, was married to John Kotesky of Horton's Bay. Rev. Perone of Petoskey performed the ceremony in the presence of about 40 invited guests. The bride has been a popular teacher at Bay Shore for the past three or four years and the groom is a prosperous farmer at Horton's Bay, where they will make their future home.

Twenty-seventh Annual County Fair A Success

ALL PREVIOUS DISPLAYS ARE BEATEN

Magnificent Showing of Fruit, Grain and Vegetables

New Stock Buildings Filled to Overflowing—Good Speed Contests Wednesday and Friday.

The twenty-seventh annual fair of the Charlevoix County Agricultural Society, held at East Jordan last week, was a hummer in every way and shows that the management in the right hands.

The new buildings were filled and the overflow had to be cared for in tents and outside pens. The fruit, grain and vegetable exhibits were grand, and in the opinion of several who make it a business to attend fairs, eclipsed any thing ever before shown at a county fair in Michigan.

Ironton, Marion Center and South Arm Granges made grand displays of fruit, Marion Center taking first prize, Ironton second and South Arm third. All, also made displays of vegetables as did also, Harmony Grange.

The fancy work department contained the largest display ever shown at the fair and was a center of attraction. The poultry exhibit was a good one, a marked advance being noticeable in the grade of birds shown.

The grounds were crowded every day. Thursday the rain spoiled the races but good speed contests were pulled off Wednesday and Friday. The Flying Bickets gave good trapeze exhibitions every afternoon and the East Jordan Military Band furnished good music.

Election of officers resulted in a re-election all around as follows:

President—Horace B. Hipp, East Jordan.

Vice-President—H. L. Olney, East Jordan.

Secretary—A. B. Nicholas, Jr., East Jordan.

Treasurer—Martin Ruhliug, East Jordan.

Marshall—H. L. Olney, East Jordan.

General Superintendent—E. B. Ward, Charlevoix.

Directors—Joseph H. Lanway, East Jordan; John A. Newville, Boyne City; Nat. Burns, Charlevoix; Herbert Olney, East Jordan.

LEVINSON--GODELL

Prominent Business Man Married Thursday

Bride Was Popular Young Lady of St. Paul, Minnesota

Married, Thursday, September 14, at the U. C. T. hall, St. Paul, Minnesota, Meyer A. Levinson of Charlevoix and Miss Freda Godell of St. Paul. Members of the family and relatives were present at the ceremony.

Mr. Levinson is one of our most prominent men and has always taken an active part in the social, fraternal and business life of the city, while Mrs. Levinson was a favorite in her home city and will be gladly welcomed to our midst. Mr. and Mrs. Levinson arrived in this city Tuesday morning, coming home by way of Chicago. They will soon be at home to their friends at the Wilbur Cline house on the south terrace. The Courier extends its heartiest congratulations.

Bird Hunters May Use Dogs.

Game Warden Oates gives the following opinion in regard to use of dogs by hunters:

"It is the opinion of this department that during the deer hunting season, the presence of a dog in the woods, unaccompanied by a person who is exclusively hunting birds, or any dog found in any hunting camp, lodging camp or club house, (during such season) where each or any of the occupants have a license for hunting deer, is expressly prohibited and prima facie evidence of its unlawful use but dogs used by hunters who are legitimately and exclusively hunting birds are entitled to protection under the law."

COMMON COUNCIL

Council Chambers, Sept. 19, 1911.
The Common Council for the City of Charlevoix met on the above date, Mayor Hampton presiding.
Aldermen present: Swinton, Nordrum, Rachow, Geiken and Webster.

Minutes of the last meeting read and approved.

Moved by Ald. Rachow and seconded by Ald. Geiken that $70.00 be transferred from the general fund to the Alice Street Paving Fund to pay bonds and interest due October 1, 1911, same to be credited back as soon as there is any money in the sinking fund. Motion carried.

Message from the Mayor.

Mayor's Office, Charlevoix, September 19, 1911.

Gentlemen of the Council:
I desire to call your attention to some matters that, in my opinion, should have decisive action.

Nothing is more important to any city than the health of its inhabitants; and because of the unusually healthful condition of our city, it has become a Mecca for thousands of summer visitors. It is our duty to see that this condition is maintained, and that anything which is dangerous to public health be abated.

It is a matter of congratulation that our water supply has always been proven the best that any city could boast, and any of the ill our people have been afflicted with cannot be traced to that source. It is a fact, proven beyond any manner of doubt, that flies are a great source of danger in the spreading of contagion. This being true, any condition that permits the breeding of these disease-bearing pests, is a menace to the health and general welfare of our city.

Livestock in the close proximity to fruit and vegetable stocks, are in my mind plainly a menace to health, and should not be permitted to exist. I am sure that all will agree that the livestock almost opposite the postoffice is a nuisance in every sense of the word, and I say this with no intent to harm its owner. I have no doubt, he uses his best efforts to keep his place as clean as possible. But all who pass know that it "smells to heaven." And it is a fine breeding place for the deadly fly. I do not know what the legal aspects of the case may be, but it is certain that some steps should be taken to get rid of this odorous and dangerous place, by diplomacy, or other wise.

Again, there are places along Bridge street that are not connected with the sewer, and some that have no closets of any kind. This is a condition that should not be permitted, and I urge that you take steps to see that the owner of every such building is compelled to install sanitary closets, connected with the sewer, forthwith.

The state law provides that dealers in fruits and vegetables shall keep their stock under screens, safe from the flies. We should pass an ordinance along these lines, and give dealers timely notice that they must provide these covered display stands before "fly-time" next season.

We should also have a City Garbage collector, and compel all householders and others to keep tight garbage cans, and thus do away with another fine breeding place for the deadly fly. I call your attention to these matters now and ask that steps be taken along these lines promptly, so that another summer will see our city fully protected in every possible manner from any form of disease.

Very respectfully,
Will E. Hampton, Mayor.
The above communication was referred to the committee on sanitary matters and police and ordinances.

Enter Ald. Glassford.
Ald. Geiken moved the adoption of the following resolution which was seconded by Ald. Nordrum.

Whereas, The common council of the city of Charlevoix, did on the 10th day of December A. D. 1910, adopt a resolution vacating all the streets and parts of streets within the corporate limits of the city of Charlevoix, and hereinafter specified, and whereas, question having been raised as to the validity of said resolution and as to the vacating of said streets and parts of streets, and suit has been commenced and is now pending in the circuit court for the county of Charlevoix, to enjoin the closing of one or more of said streets, and

Whereas, in the opinion of said council it is advisable that said streets and parts of streets should be vacated and closed without further delay, and that in the opinion of the council the public interest demands that said streets and parts of streets should be immediately vacated and closed, as a necessary public improvement, said streets being described as follows: Oak street, from the westerly line of lot 16, block 6, produced southerly to the westerly line of lot 16, block 12 produced southerly. All in Lindsay Park addition to the city of Charlevoix, and Walnut street from the southerly line of State street to the westerly line of State street in the westerly line of Elm street to the southerly line of Central avenue, from the southerly line of Central avenue to the southerly line of State street, all in Lindsay Park addition to the city of Charlevoix.

Now, Therefore, Be It Resolved, That Tuesday, the 20th day of October, 1911, at 7:30 o'clock in the afternoon, be and is hereby appointed the time when the common council will meet at the council room to consider the above proposed vacating, discontinuing and abolishing of said streets.

And it is further Resolved, That notices of such meeting, with a copy of this resolution, shall be published for at least four weeks, before the time above mentioned for such meeting in the Charlevoix Courier, a newspaper published and circulating in the city of Charlevoix.

Adopted the 19th day of September, A. D. 1911.

WILL E. HAMPTON, Mayor.
ERNEST J. HILLER, Clerk.

Adopted at a regular session of the Council, September 19, 1911, by the following aye and nay vote.

Ayes, Swinton, Glassford, Nordrum, Rachow, Geiken and Webster.

Nays, none.

Moved by Ald. Swinton and seconded by Ald. Glassford that the Council rescind its action in the matter of preparing ordinance for the renaming of Palmer street. Motion carried.

Moved by Ald. Glassford and seconded by Ald. Nordrum that the petition of David A. Furst and others for the renaming of Palmer street be laid on the table indefinitely. Motion carried.

Moved by Ald. Rachow and seconded by Ald. Nordrum that the Mayor and Clerk be authorized to quit claim to Dr. J. A. And certain properties abutting on his lots in exchange for lands that he is deeding to the city and the city surveyor be instructed to investigate the descriptions of said lands. Motion carried.

Moved by Ald. Swinton and seconded by Ald. Glassford that the bill for the Schaffer fire be referred back to the Chief of the fire department for readjustment. Motion carried.

MOTOR CARS A HELP

In the Development of Good Road Sentiment in this County.

The Michigan good roadsters have finished their meeting at Lansing, after what is spoken of as an interesting and helpful session. Action looking toward better highways was taken. Possibly it will be years before the time to consider it. As the World's Work for September says, a good road is the best thing to build and the dearest thing to write about in the whole world. When you've said that, the difference between the efficient civilization and the jungle, you've told the whole story. But there is a long and most cheerful story that might be told about the present progress of road-building in every part of the union, thanks to the general awakening of the people and to the coming of the motor car.

In a dark corner of one of the southern states—a county that God had forgotten and few men had discovered—the sparse population arose a year or two ago and said to one another: "People go to places where there are good roads. They avoid places where there are bad roads. We have bad roads. Few people come here. Let's make good roads and see what will happen." They went to work building good roads from nowhere to anywhere. Counties and townships went into debt. Private persons put up money. By great agitation and much sacrifice, they built road after road through the lonely woods. And the scoffer said that nobody would ever travel them. A lonely, perfect highway, through a thinly settled corner of the world; it did look foolish to incur a debt for that. But presently people came—in motor cars; then more came. Somebody discovered that the land along the highways was good land. It had before been taken for granted that because it had not been tilled it was of little value. Now its price has doubled—in places quadrupled; prosperous farms already bloom where there was only waste before. —Adrian Times.

"Alias Jimmy Valentine"

Novelized by
FREDERICK R. TOOMBS
From the Great Play
by PAUL ARMSTRONG

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association

JIMMY VALENTINE, WARDEN, HANDLER AND ROSE LANE.

CHAPTER X
ROSE greeted Valentine pleasantly. The blush in her fresh young cheeks equalled the pink of the roses in her hair. She thanked him for awaiting her return, and she and her father seated themselves on the sofa. The warden stood before them.

It was Mr. Lane who began to hear the conversation to a son's point.

"Mr. Randall—my daughter looks no that is the name you gave her."

"That is my name, sir."

"Well, Mr. Randall, I am not going to ask questions. I am going to let you wish to forget the past more than you. I am going to explain a situation to you and offer you employment."

"While I thank you I could not accept any position at your hands or your daughter's," answered Valentine. "It is better that I started without assistance and procured employment with total strangers."

"But, Mr. Randall," began the girl. The father continued:

"I think you are wrong, Mr. Randall. I understand perfectly the spirit which prompts you to take this stand. Still, I think you are wrong. Won't you let me explain fully?"

"With pleasure, sir."

"First we know or think we know the one thing against you. We believe, while knowing this, that you are trustworthy. I am the president of the Fourth National bank of Springfield, Massachusetts."

"Springfield, Massachusetts?" exclaimed Valentine excitedly and turning away his face to hide the signs of the shock the name gave him.

"No, Illinois," responded the banker. A relieved expression came over Valentine's face.

"I own 30 per cent of the stock, my daughter," resumed the banker. "It is her wish, to which I assent, that I take you into the bank as an employee."

Valentine could hardly believe that he was hearing aright. That a banker should offer a newly released convict a position in his establishment was astonishing.

"But, Mr. Lane," he began protestingly. But Mr. Lane again spoke.

"One moment, please. You will get a rather small salary to begin with, but as you learn the business—I understand you are an accountant?"

"I was for a time—yes, sir."

"That will make your advancement rapid, presuming, of course." The banker raised his eyes significantly.

"I understand, sir."

Rose leaned forward eagerly.

jaws disheveled almost to the point of dislocation and with eyes that threatened momentarily to lunge entirely out of their sockets.

"I'm going to make you wardenman in a national bank," was the cool response of Jimmy Valentine.

Three winter afternoons, three years after the day Jimmy Valentine began to "go it straight," a young boy, attired in black velvet knickerbockers, turned the knob of the door of the private office of the assistant cashier of the Fourth National bank of Springfield, Ill. Hardly eleven years old, Bobby Lane considered it the merest trifle of his life to be allowed a chance to invade this usually busy office and to play at being a banker.

LEE RANDALL, ASSISTANT CASHIER

The large office had two entrances, one leading into the hall of the large building and another leading into the third inclosure in which was being built a spacious new vault. In the middle of the room was a large mahogany desk. Near the hall door and close to the wall was a small mahogany writing table. Three or four comfortable chairs were scattered about the room.

On the glass of the hall door, glazed halfway to the top, was the inscription in trim black letters, "Lee Randall, Assistant Cashier."

And so it was with Lee Randall, alias Jimmy Valentine—that Bobby Lane, the banker's little son, was fond of romping away his Bobby's. The hours and with whom he frequently emulated the role of an austere, moon-promising banker.

Very much the same Jimmy Valentine in appearance and manner, Mr. Randall had, secured a signal success as assistant cashier, and neither Mr. Lane nor any other official or director had found in the three years' observation for the slightest adverse criticism of the new employee. In fact, he was deemed to be a most valuable acquisition to the executive staff of the bank and had evidenced unusual capacity as a detector of counterfeit notes and of forged signatures on negotiable instruments. Yes, the assistant cashier was a man with a future of promise in store for him, and the Fourth National of Springfield had but a month before offered him the position of cashier, with a thousand dollars a year increase over his present salary. Not one official of the Fourth National could give a satisfactory reason for his refusal of the offer. "Very remarkable young man, very," was the comment of the president of the Fourth National when notified of the episode.

"Hurray! Nobody in the office!" exclaimed Bobby to his sister Kitty, who followed him into the room.

The children, prime favorites with the assistant cashier, were accustomed to do very much as they pleased with him, with a little late home in the day, when business with the public had practically concluded. At most the only remaining thing for him to do was to attend to certain routine matters connected with the closing of the bank's business for the day.

"Come on, let us play something," challenged the sprightly Kitty, who in her short-skirted white linen dress and with her delicate features, much like those of her sister Rose, appeared more like a Christmas doll than a future inheritor of a fortune and of an imposing, dictatorial social position.

At Bobby's suggestion the children decided to play at "being a banker," and after a lengthy, spirited dispute Bobby impersonated the role of Mr. Randall, while Kitty was forced to be content with the character of a "lady borrower."

Bobby perched himself on the assistant cashier's chair and assumed as stern an expression as his childish features and mischievous roving eyes would permit.

"Now, I understand you wish a loan," began Bobby.

"I don't, either," retorted Kitty, sitting herself on a chair in front of the desk.

"Oh, come on and play. When I say 'I understand you wish a loan,' you say 'Yes.'"

"But you won't give me any money."

"If your security is good enough I will. Now," imperiously, "I understand you wish a loan."

"How much can I get?"

"No, no! You say a lot at first; that's business. Now, how much?"

"Fifty thousand dollars."

"That's fine," he paused, judiciously puckering his brows. "That's considerable money."

"That's the most I could think of," desistively.

"Don't talk that way," instructed Bobby. "You would be put out for making breaks like that. Just don't say anything when they find fault. Now, that's considerable money, but of course you have security?" He

The Difference

Between a Dollar Saved and a Dollar Spent is just Two Dollars. Did it ever occur to you that way? It's worth thinking about.

Another difference is the feeling you have afterward. The Dollar saved gives you a feeling of pleasure. It may call for a little sacrifice for the time being, but afterward you feel better for having denied yourself and the Dollar is still yours—you can have it when you wish.

We make it a part of our business to urge you to have a bank account. Have an account at this bank, for it not only helps our business but yours more so.

SCHOOL CHILD'S NEEDS

Secretary Dixon of Michigan State Board of Health

Body and Mind are Closely Related and Should be in Best Condition

The school year has just begun, and food parents are carefully selecting new outfits of clothes so that their children may compare favorably in appearance with their neighbors' children.

But why only see that their stock of clothes is complete? Clothes do not make the man. It is far more important to see that both mind and body are in the best condition possible for development.

Many a child is forced backward toward the foot of the class because of some minor ailment which might be easily corrected by proper treatment.

Do not neglect a child because he seems stupid. Then is the time when he needs attention. Any child who is weak or does not learn easily should be taken to a competent physician who can often find defects of the child, the correction of which will make the child strong and robust both mentally and physically.

Our cities are fast coming to a realization of the fact that many of the children are backward, not because of lack of brains, but because their defective bodies do not supply the brain with enough good rich blood to develop properly. They hire reputable physicians whose duty it is to examine these children carefully, and, if any defect is found, to take steps to have it removed.

If a child is unable to see proper ly it cannot be expected to learn its lessons. The concentration and application necessary to accomplish this is impossible. And yet one-third of the school children are found to suffer from defective vision in various degrees. This is a condition which is easily remedied in the majority of cases by proper treatment.

One of the common causes of backward children are adenoids and tonsils. These are lymphatic growths in the throat which fill up the upper part of the throat and render breathing through the nose difficult or impossible. Such a child has a characteristic facial expression and is known as a mouth breather. Not only is the face affected, but backwardness in the development of the entire system is also caused. These are readily removed by a slight surgical operation.

See that the child receives plenty of fresh air and exercise. The body needs plenty of systematic exercise in the open air. A healthy body and a healthy brain go hand in hand and one seldom finds one without the other. See that the child's study and sleeping hours are well ventilated so that it will not be poisoned by foul air.

A healthy start in life means health, wealth and happiness in later years. See that the child lacks none of the opportunities for this development.

If the child is frail and does not learn readily, look for a cause. There are many minor ailments and defects, the correction of which may be the turning point in the life of your child.

The best is none too good for him. See that no stone is left unturned in bringing the child to a healthy maturity and you will be astonished at the results.

HUMOR OF THE DAY

Man and His Ways.

"The holiest grater I ever knew," says a friend, "was a summer resort hotel man with whom I became involved last August. I spent three days at his joint and couldn't stand it any longer. When I called for my bill I said very severely:

"I think you advertised magnificent scenery up here?"

"Yes, sir, I did."

"With good fishing?"

"Good fishing too."

"Pure air and no mosquitoes?"

"That's the way my advertisement read, sir. You quote correctly."

"No flies, no malaria, airy rooms, unobscured beds, etc?"

"Exactly. Is there anything wrong?"

"Is there anything wrong? Where is the scenery?"

"There isn't any."

"Where are the fish?"

"I never knew of a fish being caught in these parts."

"The flies are there, and the mosquitoes are still worse, aren't they? And your rooms are stuffy, and your table is rotten."

"You're right."

"Then you admit you lied about the place?"

"Oh, is that what you've been trying to get at? Why didn't you say so in the first place? Sure I lied. I'd have admitted that a half an hour ago if you'd mentioned it and saved you a lot of talk. I'm the biggest liar in these parts. Your bill for the three days will be $117.75. Come again next season."—Boston Traveler.

Too Personal.

Patrolman Casey had ordered a pair of shoes at Hunsberg's store and was about to try one of them on when the clerk reached for it and deftly sprinkled some French chalk in it to ease the forthcoming strain. When he handed it back the patrolman threw it on the floor, pulled on his own shoe and started out.

The proprietor had noted the scene. "What's the matter, Mr. Casey?" he pointed as he caught up with him. "Was the clerk mean or anything?"

For a moment Casey glared at him in almost speechless anger, then observed with icy dignity, "If I can't come into a place to try on a pair of shoes without havin' chloride of lime put in them beforehand, I'll thrash some sense into 'em."—Success Magazine.

paused. "Well, say 'Yes.'"

"Yes."

"Well, I thought so—what?"

"What?"

"What have you got in the way of security?" he asked.

"A farm."

"How large a farm?"

"Ten million acres."

"Well, that's good. Now, what grows on this farm?"

"She hesitated, then said: 'Fruit—peaches and apples.'"

"That's good. What else?" he pronounced.

"Pears."

"Any bananas?" Kitty shook her head.

"Very sorry," the lad went on, "but we have all the fruit you have in our own back yard. The only fruit farm I could loan money on would be a banana farm. No. No bananas. To loan. Good day."

"But you didn't tell me to say bananas," insisted the girl.

"Tell you? A banker don't tell you anything you ought to know."

After delivering himself of this piece of financial wisdom Bobby endeavored to continue, but Kitty insisted on being the man for awhile. While the argument was in progress the door leading from the vault enclosure opened and in came no less an individual than Jimmy Valentine. He had come from inspecting the new vault, now practically completed, and which he had pronounced as fine a piece of burglar proof construction as he had ever seen—and Jimmy Valentine in his day, as some of us know, had rightly been considered a connoisseur in this particular connection. To settle the dispute the assistant cashier took Kitty out with him to show her the vault. In the building of which she had shown a childish interest.

No sooner had the door closed behind them when through the hall entrance came Rose Lane, who, gowned in the height of Paris fashion and of more mature development, presented even a more alluring picture of femininity than she had at the time three years before when, just out of Vassar, she had rescued Jimmy Valentine from the horrors of Sing Sing prison.

"Hello, Bobby! Where's Kitty?" she greeted the boy.

"Outside." He pointed toward the door leading to the vault.

"Where is Mr. Randall?" she continued.

Bobby grinned knowingly.

"You're always asking for Mr. Randall, aren't you?" he asked sanely.

Info Rose Lane's face came suddenly a flare of anger at the lad, but in a moment it was gone. A smile, tender, hopeful and true, supplanted it.

And Bobby, with all the accrued wisdom of eleven years, saw the smile and smiled in return, for he was old enough to understand.

HE CHANGED HIS MIND.

Off had his boyhood friend, Jim Brown. Write: "Drop your work in town. Come visit me on my nice farm. Where all is sunshine, pure and warm. We'll feed you such as fine as silk. We'll fatten you on sweet, rich milk. And maybe, old boy—who can tell?—You'll wed a dimpled country belle."

But, no. While he loved good old Jim, the city in just suited him.

And country—good! Haystacks and cows, fleas and flies, milkmaids and snails, and treckled kids to give him fits.

He goes to visit Heaven Brown. Not on your life! Just put that down!

But, to, one day he got so sick!

The doctor took his pulse—"Tick, tick!"—And said: "I'll give you just one year if you stay in this nice farm."

The place for him to make rapids is out in the sweet country air!

And so at last he wrote Jim Brown: "Meet the ten train. I'm coming down!"

But no dumb bayonet met the train. For that ox team he looked in vain. But Jim in buzz car up to date. For his old friend old daddy wait.

Quick whisked him to his modern farm. Where all was sweet content and charm. And there where nature hath exal. The city dude was soon made well.

Then he quick in his partner wrote The following sharp pointed note:

"Dear friend, you bet I've had enough. Of city life and all its bluffs. I've bought the farm right next to Jim. Am learning farming now from him. I met a dimpled milkmaid here. And now she calls me 'tubby dear.'"

Knew She Had Forgotten.

She had just returned from a shopping tour, first, but radiant.

He had just returned from the office tired, but—well, tired.

Quivering with delight at the array of samples slipped from rolls of dress goods, she emptied the contents of her purse into her lap. There was a metallic sound. A look of dismay crossed her face.

"There!" she exclaimed. "I just knew there was something I had forgotten to buy!"

"What was it, dear?" he asked, with an assumption of interest.

"I'm sure I don't know," she replied pettishly. "But I had a half dollar left."—Boston Herald.

Perhaps?

One of ex-Governor Patten's best stories—and he has a rare collection of real witty stories—is one bearing upon the prevalence of divorce. At a recent meeting, when he discussed the need of uniform divorce laws, the end of a near told the story, saying:

"Too many Americans are in sympathy with the little schoolboy who was asked to write his idea of Greek marriage customs."

"After a little thought," he had wrote: "Among the Greeks a man only married one wife, which was called monogamy."—Philadelphia Times.

His Mistake.

"Just one, darling," he pleaded as fools do.

"One moment," she said, restraining him. "Tell me first, have you ever kissed another girl?"

"Never," he swore.

"Then," she said, "you may get your hat, for you're either a liar or a dead one, and I'm neither a reformator nor a miracle worker."—Baltimore Sun.

Waiting For an Opinion.

"Now, ladies," turned the major, "what is the use? Don't you know that I know you are lying?"

"Yessuh!" replied Blanche; "but, you see, Marse Henry, I kind o' thought I'd like to hab yo' opinion on de subject befo' I decided dat I was lyin' to sho' mahself. Now dat yo' says I is, Marse Henry, I jest reglarly knows I is, suh."—Harper's Weekly.

Safer and Saner.

"You encourage your son in writing sentimental poetry?"

"Well," replied Farmer Cornsloss, "I don't exactly encourage him, but I'd rather he'd put that sort of thing in the weekly paper than put it into letters that might get read before a jury."—Washington Star.

PRIZE AND BARGAIN DAY THURSDAY

Work of Development Bureau Brings Results.

Fitting Dedication of New See Building—List of Prize Winners—Large Crowd Present.

The second annual bargain day and prize exhibit of the Charlevoix Retail Merchants' Association was an immense success. The show rooms, which were in the handsome new See building, corner of Antrim and Bridge streets, were thronged from morning until night with people viewing the exhibits of Charlevoix farms and orchards, which not only were beyond expectations, but we have yet to hear of anyone who will say they ever saw finer fruit and vegetables anywhere than were on display Thursday. The great advancement in the proper care of orchards so Charlevoix county is enabled to put up so magnificent display of fruit must, in a large measure, be credited to the work of the Western Michigan Development Bureau in its work of education, both through the printed page and by giving orchard demonstrations which have taught the people of Charlevoix the grand possibilities of Charlevoix county.

Another display that attracted much attention was that of the Argo Milling Company. They exhibited flour of their manufacture and bread made from the flour. At the next exhibit prizes will be given for the best bread made out of their flour. See their ad.

Attracting nearly equal attention to the exhibits was the beautiful new building in which it was held. S. M. See & Sons are to be congratulated upon the enterprise shown in the erection of so substantial proof of their faith in the future development of this city.

Throughout the afternoon the Charlevoix city band furnished music for the crowd. Auctioneer Byers auctioned off the exhibits and the evening was taken up in dancing, the whole making a fitting dedication of the new building to the advancement of Charlevoix county.

The list of prize winners follows: Cabbage—1st, Charlie Pierce; 2d, Nat Burns. Carrots—1st, Henry Black; 2d, William Burns. Onions—1st, Charles Empey; 2d, Ben Nowland. Pumpkins—1st, Will Hall; 2d, H. JEWISH NEW YEAR

Occurred Last Week—Celebration Began Friday Night

Day of Atonement October 1—Feast of Purim Comes in February.

Saturday, September 23, was New Year's day in the Hebrew calendar, and on Friday night at sundown, which is New Year's eve, the Jewish people begin their celebration. Services are held in their synagogues, beginning at 7:15 o'clock that night and are followed by services on the morning of the first day of the new year.

It is observed as a holy day from sundown Friday to sundown Sunday. It is not a mere day of rejoicing, like the secular New Year, but a day of remembrance or memorial, reminding the Jews of the duty of self-examination and self-judgment. When the earnest devotions of the day are done, the festival is made an occasion of social and domestic rejoicing.

The holiest day to the Jew in his entire religion is the Day of Atonement, which is ushered in when the first star appears in the heavens Sunday evening, October 1. From that hour until the evening of the following day, October 2, the devout Israelite will give himself entirely to God.

The Feast of the Tabernacles falls on Friday evening, October 6, and Saturday, October 7, and continues for seven days. The eighth day is ordained to be kept as a "solemn assembly." This will be observed on Friday evening and Saturday following, October 13 and 14.

The Feast of Purim will come in February, the Passover in April and the Feast of the Weeks in May.

ANNUAL GRANGE PLOWING MATCH

Will be Held at Ironton Thursday, October Fifth

OVER ONE HUNDRED FORTY DOLLARS

In Prizes Have Been Contributed by Charlevoix Business Men

Will be a Day of Unalloyed Pleasure—Chicken Pie Dinner and a Big Dance in the Evening.

The annual Grange Plowing Match will be held this year, under the auspices of Ironton Grange at the farm of Alfred Williams, one-half mile south and one-half mile west of Ironton Grange hall, Thursday, October 5.

This is the first plowing match ever held under the auspices of Ironton Grange and it is expected that the case with which the citizens of the three cities, Charlevoix, Boyne City and East Jordan can get there as well as its central location for the farmers of the county will bring together an immense crowd. Over one hundred and forty dollars in prizes have been contributed by the business men of Charlevoix, which will make the taking of prizes well worth while to the contestants, both in plowing and held day sports, which will be held in the afternoon.

One of the chief features is the chicken pie dinner. Ironton Grange has arranged for this essential feature, so go prepared to get filled up. The day will close with a dance at the hall in the evening.

For years Charlevoix County has enjoyed the unique distinction of holding the only plowing match to the state of Michigan and the day has come to be looked forward to, as a day of fun, frolic and pleasure. Not only has it been a gala day but the careful plowing done, has been a revelation to those who never before realized what a vast difference there was between the work of different plowmen.

Both the City of Boyne and the Hum have made arrangements to carry the crowds both ways so you are assured of an easy method of transportation. Go to Ironton and enjoy a day of pleasure and get in good moral. A large ad in another part of the paper gives a complete list of the prizes.

Republicans Meet October 10. Sheriff Robbins was in the city today making arrangements for the second annual banquet of the Charlevoix County Republican Club which will be held at Baker's Inn October 10. Governor Osborn, Insurance Commissioner Palmer and other prominent speakers will be present.

Marriage Licenses. Gilbert C. Harvey, 21, Boyne City; Alwylda Wood, 21, Boyne City; John A. Ward, 21, Boyne City; Mary E. Roe, 18, Boyne City; Paul Pisek, 29, Charlevoix; Albert Lebedr, 32, Charlevoix; Fred Biesel, 30, Boyne City; Mable Limberg, 27, Boyne City.

INTEREST INCREASES IN THE COURIER VOTING CONTEST

Many Daily Inquiries About Working and Voting—Who Will Get the $10.00 Gold Piece—Trade With Merchants Giving Coupons.

Judging from the interest that has been manifested in the great Prize Voting Contest so far, there is going to be a great scramble for the $10 in gold that will be given to the contestant having the largest number of votes on October 18. The special prize is worth winning, and the contestants realize the fact.

That the contest is a success is an assured fact. There has never been a contest in this locality where more or better prizes have been offered, or where there was more strict adherence, justice and equity to all the participants. The Courier desires to emphasize the point that every contestant will be accorded an absolute fair deal.

The name of the judges of the contest will be announced soon. Bear in mind the merchants who are giving coupons with every dollar purchase. When you trade at these stores be sure and ask for coupons. Every little piece of paper bearing 25 votes, may win for some friend of yours the beautiful $100 Obermeyer & Son piano.

Get your friends to subscribe for the Courier. For each one year new subscription you will receive 600 votes; renewals for one year, 500 votes; each one year back subscription, 400 votes.

There are already a large list of contestants, but there is opportunity to nominate others. Fill out the nominating blank and send it to this office. Also cut out free vote coupon and vote it for your favorite. In order that every contestant may fully understand the votes of this contest, the Courier wishes to state that the contestant having the largest number of votes during the contest will be awarded the piano as first prize, the one having the next largest number of votes will have first choice of the other prizes. The third largest will have her choice of the remaining prizes, and so on until all the prizes have been distributed.

Use the free coupon in this issue. If you know of any lady who has not been nominated whom you think would make a good race, use the nominating blank in this issue and send her name to this office or bring it in person and it will be entered. It matters not if she is married or single. This is a popular voting contest—not necessarily a "young lady" voting contest. Read the rules and regulations on another page and govern yourself accordingly. Some one is going to receive these prizes and you can help decide who it will be.

First come in the contest will be Wednesday, October 18, 1911, at which time $10 in gold will be awarded to the contestant receiving the largest number of votes.

These are the names of the contestants who have been nominated.

HULME-METCALF

Very Pretty Home Wedding Took Place Tuesday.

A very pretty wedding took place Tuesday afternoon when Miss Hatlie M. Metcalf became the bride of Herbert Hulme.

The wedding occurred at the family home of the bride, which was most beautifully decorated with cut flowers, the colors being red and white and pink and white.

Mrs. Edward Widdifield presided at the piano, playing Mendelssohn's wedding march as the bridal party took their place under an arch festooned with flowers. Rev. F. M. Taylor performed the ceremony, the bride being given away by her brother, George Metcalf. Mrs. Lena Huntington was mistress of ceremonies and Master Albert Widdifield ring-bearer. The bride was beautifully gowned in white shantung and carried a shower bouquet. Many beautiful presents were received.

After the ceremony the guests, about forty-five in number, enjoyed a delightful two course lunch, after which Mr. and Mrs. Hulme left for Mackinaw and Onaway for a short visit.

They will be at home to their many friends after October 15, at their home on Clinton street.

NOW IN NEW QUARTERS

Palace Clothing Store Moves to New See Block.

Store One of the Finest Gents Furnishings Establishments in Northern Michigan.

Away back yonder at the very dawn of creation, a man's wardrobe consisted simply of a few fig leaves and a pleasant smile. Since that time, however, customs have changed and styles become so modified that nothing save the best productions that can be turned out by the master clothing makers will pass muster, especially among the class of men who date on being well dressed. The Palace Clothing Store which started in business in Charlevoix in May 1910, is an example of what can be done in making an up-to-date clothing store. At the time the store was opened, Mr. Meyer Cohen was determined to give Charlevoix a store where one could obtain nothing but the newest in the line of clothing and gents furnishings. His line of goods have fully met the approval of the best dressers, and he holds a winning hand in the game for public favor. He doesn't set down and wait for business, but goes after it, hence the splendid line of patrons this store has secured.

He carries a complete line of the famous "Society Brand" clothing, Kingsbury hats, Elgin shirts and Corless-Coon collars, while in other lines of gents' togery he carries the best of makes. He satisfies the most fastidious, and if there is any thing in the outfit he cannot supply, it is something foreign to American use.

Saturday, September 30 will be "Opening Day" at this up-to-date store. The public in general is extending a cordial invitation to visit the store and see for themselves that the claims Mr. Cohen make are not in the least exaggerated. The gentlemen will be furnished with cigars, while the ladies, who by the way, are the best judges of how a man should be dressed, will be furnished a nice souvenir of the occasion.

STALEY-SMITH

Well Known Charlevoix Couple Married Sunday.

Married, Sunday, September 24 at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. S. H. Smith, Arthur Staley and Mildred Smith both of this city, Rev. F. Dewey Ehle officiating. The ceremony took place in the presence of a few immediate friends of the family, after which a delightful wedding breakfast was served. The bride was beautifully gowned in tan colored silk. Both Mr. and Mrs. Staley are well known and popular young people of this city, Mr. Staley having been employed in Mr. Smith's grocery while Mrs. Staley has long been his efficient assistant. For the present they will make their home with Mr. Smith.

LOCAL OPTION WORKERS MET

Enthusiastic Gathering at Boyne City Friday Night

CHARLEVOIX WAS WELL REPRESENTED

Low is Being Enforced in Charlevoix County

Hard Fight in Prospect Next Spring—Dry Workers are Ready to Meet Their Wet Opponents.

The Charlevoix Local Option Committee met at the Maccabee hall at Boyne City last Friday night with an attendance of about fifty. Fifteen of the enthusiasts of this city went over in a launch. A delegation from East Jordan were also present.

The meeting was called to order by W. P. Porter of East Jordan. At the opening Rev. Brady of Boyne City led the gathering in a short prayer, followed by the report of the secretary of the last meeting.

A number of speakers were called upon to tell of the work that was being done throughout the county by the workers of this worthy cause. Among them were Dr. A. M. Wilkinson, Rev. Taylor, Rev. Putnam, George H. VanPelt and R. W. Kane of Charlevoix and A. B. Clark of Marion. Other speakers from the various parts of the county were W. H. White, Rev. Brady and a Mr. Taylor of Boyne City and Mr. Nites, and Mr. Malpass of East Jordan.

Many of the men reported that there were several boot-leggers in the county and they were doing their best to capture and convict the offenders. R. W. Kane, chairman of the Law Enforcement Committee, stated that he had not had any complaints turned in to him and said that if there were any made he would do his duty to see that the law under his jurisdiction was enforced and that he would start the machine and there would be something doing.

Dr. Parmentiere of Petoskey, a strong worker in Emmett county was present and addressed the meeting telling of the work being done in Petoskey, and of the conviction of the offenders in that county.

The general business was taken up in due form and after being disposed of, a song was rendered by Dr. A. M. Wilkinson, after which the meeting received a rare treat at the hands of the Boyne City people in the form of a banquet.

The meeting was then adjourned to meet at Charlevoix at the call of the secretary. After the adjournment the executive committee met in W. H. White's office and transacted their business in a short session.

The meeting showed great enthusiasm and delegates from all over the county were present. A hard fight will be made and the local option forces will be there all the time.

FEEDING DAIRY COWS ON PASTURE

There seems to be a tendency with most dairymen to think that pasture grass is a universal and sufficient feed. As soon as the cows are turned out to the barn to the pasture, the pasture

At least that is the way too many people look upon the matter, says Kirby's Dudley Farmer. In the wattle silage, the best substitute for grass, never fed exclusively if the best returns are to be had. While silage not exactly grass. It is as near it as anything the human mind can conjure, but every successful dairyman is wise enough to know that silage alone will not do. It contains succulence, and it contains some grain, but if the cow were to eat enough to provide the material for matter necessary for the body

While this comparison is a little overdrawn, it is sufficient to show that the best results will be secured if the fa-

He has made a remarkable growth in public favor. This last year has shown a gain of over 50 per cent over the previous year. The greatest number of entries and transfers ever recorded were placed upon the club records last year. One reason for this remarkable growth is that the superior color, flavor and richness of the milk, cream and butter from the Guernsey cow are becoming better known. This, with her record as an economical producer, returning the most for a dollar invested in food, has made her a great favorite in the progressive dairy where a high class of dairy products for a critical trade is demanded.

ture is supplemented with some grain and possibly some dry feed, such as good silage or alfalfa hay. If the cow refuses to eat these, then you may be sure that the grass is all they need, but the chances are that they will

One reason why the wise dairyman does not depend upon silage alone in the winter is because he realizes that the cow's appetite must be tempted by a variety of feeds in order to get her to consume the most at a profit. Now the same thing is true while she is upon grass. This feed in itself is superior to anything about which we know, but at the same time if the cow can be coaxed to eat other feed in connection with it she will be able to give better returns at the mill. We have better returns in the past, we have a great deal about the ratios of maintenance and the ratios that produce a profit. It is readily admitted that a cow must provide herself with feed necessary to answer the demands of her existence before she can yield a profit. Now, this law is just as true

There is another side to this feeding question that is worthy of consideration also, and that is the effect that it will have upon the cows for future milking periods. Even though the milk flow is not increased to any marked degree while the feed is being given, the energy that it will store up for use during later periods will make it possible for the ewe to keep up her high production year after year, while if she did not have this extra nourishment she would naturally fall off, for the steady work would tax her consti-

JIMMY VALENTINE, WARDEN HANDLER AND ROSE LANE.

CHAPTER XI

JIMMY VALENTINE entered his private office from the room where the new vault had been erected. He saw Rose Lane standing close to his desk, where Bobby was presiding with all the dignity that went with his age. The girl's eyes met his, but only for an instant. Valentine lowered his gaze to the floor; his thoughts whirling rapidly through his brain.

True, at one time he had had serious thoughts concerning the beautiful young woman who had saved him from Slag Slag, from Warden Handler and the warden's favorite pastime of "solitaire."

But of late he had come to realize that he would be doing her a lasting wrong, a vital injustice, to permit himself to make any serious advances toward her. She had been attracted by him. She was now even more interested in him. He was observing enough to learn this. As for his own emotions toward her? He loved her. That no one would deny who saw him in her company. He could not conceal it. Even the infantile Bobby had guessed what he had endeavored to make his secret. Yet he had realized plainly the uncertainty of his position. At any moment the unexpected might happen, or, rather, the expected might happen, and some one would possibly uncover and reveal phases of his past that he would be unable to explain. Such had been the guiding thought of Jimmy Valentine in his social intercourse with the banker's daughter during his tenure as assistant cashier in the bank in Springfield, and now he saw more clearly than ever the wisdom of his course. Doyle-Doyle, the relentless tracker of men—had threatened to "get" him, and Doyle was always an element to be reckoned with. Although Doyle's threat had been made years before, Valentine had never underestimated the detective's ability nor his tenacity of purpose. While he, Valentine, had taken precautions which he firmly considered would prevent Doyle from getting a hold on him again, yet, after all, it was by no means definitely assured that he would not defeat the ex-convict in his ambition to live "on the square," therefore Valentine must under no circumstance make any serious advances to-wrinkled to glare before him. Again he read it from end to end: "Look out," he read. "Doyle will be in town this afternoon at 4 to see you about an important matter."

The assistant cashier dropped his chin into his palm and stared vacantly at the opposite wall.

"Doyle," he muttered—"George Doyle. He said he'd get me if it took ten years—a lifetime. Well, perhaps he can; then, again, perhaps he can not. At any rate, he can probably ruin my career, my hopes, my standing here, where I have friends who believe in me."

Valentine leaned back meditatively in his chair. The fatal telegram dropped unheeded to the floor. His mouth set determinedly. A new fire burned in his eyes, the fire that had consumed him and had spurred him on when in the days and nights of the past he had ventured forth on a desperate enterprise.

He would give George Doyle a fight that he would win. He would match wits against that of the skilled thief. He already had laid the basis for what now must be his course of procedure, and he believed that it would stand even the cunning and force of George Doyle. At any rate, he could try.

Valentine leaned forward and pressed a button. A clerk entered. The assistant cashier hesitated a moment, then spoke quickly.

"Tell the watchman to come here," he directed.

The clerk nodded and went out in search of Red Flanagan—yes, Red, none other than the one time accomplice of Jimmy Valentine, whom the latter, true to his word, had taken with him in his attempt to "go it straight."

Flanagan must be told of the coming of Doyle, who was his sworn enemy also. In addition, Red would have to assist the assistant cashier, now known as Mr. Handler, in the manner which the latter was about to execute.

Then there was Avery—old Bill Avery. From the day that Valentine had sent him away from the hotel in Albany Avery had been making heroic efforts to live "on the square."

The three years that had elapsed since No. 1289 had advanced Avery, long a "yeggman" of the most desperate type, the price of a railroad ticket, had made a revolutionary transformation in him. Today he was married, had a growing business and had performed for Valentine a service that was to render the vengeance efforts of George Doyle much more difficult and somewhat less effective than the detective would relish should he ever learn the truth.

Avery had been in communication with Valentine on various occasions in a secret manner. So carefully concealed, in fact, had been his moves that not even Red Flanagan had obtained the slightest knowledge of them.

True, Red was aware that Valentine had received various puzzling communications from one "Mr. Cronin," but how was Red to know that Mr. Cronin was Bill Avery unless the assistant cashier was pleased so to inform him, which he was not?

At first Valentine had had the belief that some friend was responsible for the sending of the warning telegram.

"I WILL REMEMBER"

but now that he more calmly considered the matter he dismissed that thought. Another idea fixed itself in his brain, which would cause him to govern his actions accordingly in the face of the danger that he wisely acknowledged to himself to be vitally alarming. At any cost he must prevent Doyle from turning Rose Lane and her father against him. They had trusted him—they alone—in the first instance, and so it would be wit against wit to defeat Doyle and, if need be, life against life.

The minutes passed. What could he do? The matter with the clerk or with Red? Had the watchman, too, received a warning? And if so had he followed the impulse that had first come to Jimmy Valentine, to flee—the time honored resource of the crook, the time honored confession of the crook, flight? No, that would not do. Jimmy Valentine in an emergency like this for—

A voice was heard outside in the vault room: "All right, Kitty, I'll play some more with you in a few minutes. Mr. Randall wants me." It was the voice of Red Flanagan addressed to the little girl, whom he daily gave "piggyback" rides, at the daily hazard of his situation.

The door swung open, and Red stood before the assistant cashier. But not even his old mother, if she had been alive, would have recognized him. Hair as red as ever it was, eyes as blue and smile equally as innocent as that which had misled half a dozen eternally-fledged judges in the court of special sessions in years gone, yet the special sessions in years gone, yet the ward Rose Lane. The burden of misery that might descend upon him would only be given greater weight.

Valentine desired to talk alone with Rose Lane, and after a lengthy conversation, punctuated by lavish promises of hunting trips, sent the lad away to play with Kitty in the new vault, which for their purpose became a snuggler's cave.

The assistant cashier stepped forward toward Rose, who stood close to his desk, resting her side on its polished top.

Wilson Grange No. 719

Wilson Grange met in regular session Saturday, Sept. 23, 1911 with an attendance of forty-two members and one visitor.

Worthy Master George Jaquays called the meeting to order and filled the vacant offices. During the business session two candidates were initiated in the third and fourth degrees. Several bills were presented and referred to the finance committee. The Secretary read communications in regard to the county convention at Pine Lake Grange the first Tuesday in October. The members voted to send $2 to the Past Master of South Grange of Chestling, Mich., to help him.

The Ladies' Auxiliary announced that the next meeting would be held with Sister Lovina Brinwall and turned $15.40 into the Grange treasury. The following delegates were elected to the county convention, Wm. J. Saunders, E. L. Nowland, Alma Nowland, Wilford Warden. After this the master called for the lecturer's program which consisted of several selections of stories, songs, readings, recitations and instrumental music. Grange closed in form.

Ironton Grange No. 707

Ironton Grange No. 707 met in regular session, September 19, 1911, with 53 members and two visitors present.

Under reports of special committees, Brother H. E. Gohlentz reported about $140 in prizes for the plowing match. Brother P. H. Knudsen reported third prize on grain at the fair, $500. His expenses $100. Brother E. H. Clark reported second prize on fruit, $1500; his expenses $150. Sister Fannie Knudsen reported third prize on canned fruit, $300. J. Nasson reported that he would not charge anything for handling some of the things to East Jordan. A rising vote of thanks was then given to the committees.

The motion was made and carried that they obligate and initiate in the third and fourth at the next meeting.

Miss Mae Stohlman was then obligated in the first and second degrees.

Under the head of new business four delegates were elected for the county convention. Brother Ole Lyngkhip, Brother Joe Kemp, Sister E. Kemp and Sister R. Meggison were elected. The alternates were Brothers Will Meggison and Joe Courier and Sisters E. Courier and E. Knudsen.

The lecturer's program consisted of songs, readings, stories and recitations in both German and English language.

For the good of the order, the motion was made and carried, that the Grange secure some wood.

The motion was made and carried that a month from now the matter of selling notes be taken up so as to raise money for the Grange.

The chairman of the woman's work committee requested all the ladies to meet at the hall next Tuesday, September 26, 1911, and finish their sewing.

Sister John Nasson sent in her resignation on the woman's work committee. Sister Lewis was appointed in her place.

Sister J. Hammond sent in her resignation as chaplain. It was voted to leave that until the next meeting and then elect a new chaplain.

Grange closed in regular form to meet again October 3, 1911.

I. O. O. F. BANS LIQUOR DEALERS

At Meeting of Sovereign Grand Lodge Held in Indianapolis, Indiana.

The incongruity of a man in the bejeweled robes of a high priest smoking a pipe so appealed to the sovereign grand lodge of Odd Fellows held in Indianapolis that it adopted a rule that in no lodge room of the order should smoking hereafter be permitted during degree work.

A constitutional amendment was adopted placing a ban on hotel keepers who hold licenses for liquor sales, from membership. The new law will only affect the new members.

The lodge refused to give the Rebekahs a national assembly and also placed its official objection to the operation and maintenance of a national tuberculosis sanitarium. The proposed constitutional amendment to admit members at a minimum age of 18 years was turned down.

With this action and the approval of the appointment of General A. R. Stocker, mayor of Mansburg, Ohio, to be commander of the Patriarchs Militant, the supreme tribunal of Odd Fellows adjourned to meet in next year's convention at Winnipeg, Man.

General M. A. Rainey of Marengo, Iowa, present commander of the Patriarchs Militant, will give way on January 1, 1912, to General Crocker, who will serve until September of next year, with the term of Grand Sir John C. Cockburn of Indianapolis, who appointed him. A salary of $3,500 annually is attached to this office.

License for Junk Dealers

A new law was enacted by the last legislature which makes it rather binding on youngsters before they can sell junk, etc., to junk dealers. According to the law no rag buyer or buyer of old iron or metal, may purchase anything from a minor under 16 years of age.

The following state law, however, so makes such permits necessary in order to "dicker" with the junk dealer:

(1906) Section 1. That every dealer in second hand goods, junk shop dealer, peddler, rag or paper buyer, pawn broker, or his or their agent or clerk, to purchase any goods, things, articles from a minor under 16 years, without the written consent of the guardian of such minors, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof in any court of competent jurisdiction, shall be punished by a fine of not exceeding $25 nor less than $5 and the cost of prosecution or by imprisonment in the county jail for a period not so exceeding 30 days, or both fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court before which the conviction may be had.—Cincinnati News.

BENFORD--CROSS

Popular East Jordan Lady Marries Mr. Pleasant Man.

The home of Mr. and Mrs. Allen E. Cross of Division street, West side, was a scene of beauty and delight Tuesday evening, the occasion being the marriage of their daughter, Miss Lola M., to John W. Benford of Mt. Pleasant, Michigan.

At eight o'clock Miss Maudie Nield began the wedding march from Mendelssohn and the bridal party appeared. The bride wore a cream silk gown and the groom was attired in full evening dress. The ring ceremony was performed by Rev. George Benford of Grand Blanc, father of the groom.

The young people were graciously remembered by numerous and substantial tokens of fellowship.

After refreshments, Mr. and Mrs. Benford left by automobile for Charlevoix and will visit several points in the southern part of the state. They will be at home in Mt. Pleasant after October first.

Among those from out of town attending the wedding were Mr. and Mrs. George W. Cross and Mr. and Mrs. E. Mudge of Central Lake; Rev. and Mrs. Benford of Grand Blanc; Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Washburn and daughters, Misses Marjorie and Lorraine of Charlevoix.—East Jordan Herald.

Literary Notes

An Unfortunate Speculation Leads To a Fortune.

The men who write popular songs of the day are constantly on the alert to catch new ideas or mould old odd sayings and phrases into songs. Thus, when Al Bryan, one of the staff of Jerome H. Remick & Co., lost a little fortune in Wall Street the other day and bemoaned his loss to the head of the firm, somebody at the same a little hint that some advance royalty would be welcome. Mr. Remick replied, saying, "What's the use, Bryan? You'll do the same thing over again." To Bryan this was worth more than he had lost, for inside of twenty-four hours he had written the words and Al Gumble the music. Stella Mayhew sang the new song entitled, "You'll Do the Same Thing Over Again," at the Winter Garden, and it proved the hit of the show. The sales of this song in two weeks' time warranted it being given first place of the best seller in the Remick Catalogue, which meant thousands of copies going out daily, and royalties will accrue to both Bryan and Gumble that will enable them to live in affluence for some time to come. Al Bryan claims that it pays to dabble in Wall Street, since it gave him the idea. Mr. Remick himself that part of the royalties should come back to him for the endowment of a Song Writers' Home since he suggested the title, but Bryan winks his eye and says that if he had not lost in Wall Street the song would never have been written and the firm would not have published it, and consequently never made any money out of it. It is a topical song, and has some eight or nine verses, with a different chorus for each verse. We quote the first verse and chorus:

You're never happy until you are wed;
Soon you get married, but when The honeymoon is over, you'll wish you were single again.

Wife goes back to her mother in Maine.
You gently murmur, "Boys never again."

Once, you know, is enough for me; Gee, ain't I glad I am free?—but CHORUS:

You'll do the same thing over, over and over again;
You'll do the same thing over, over and over again.

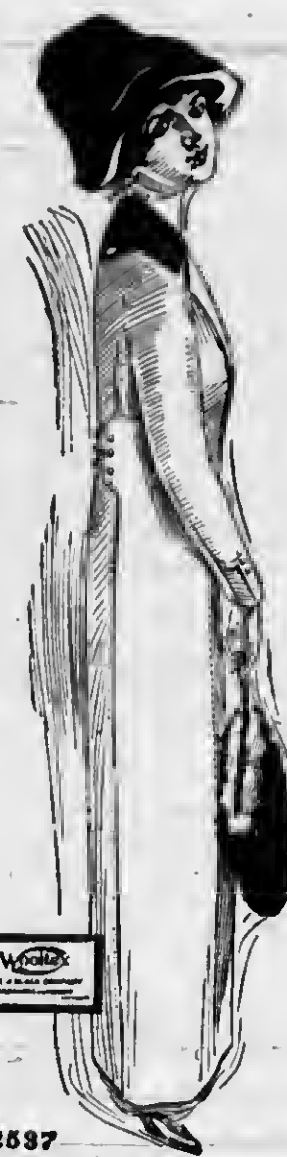

You'll meet with some nice little girlie.
She'll smile at you sweetly, and then, You'll go buy the ring, and you'll do the same thing Over and over again.

Dual Purpose Sheep.
The day of the single purpose sheep is clearly past. The breeder who will not meet competition based upon a combination of fleece and carcass is facing certain defeat. This has been recognized by the large sheep interests of the country for a number of years, and under present conditions it is equally applicable to flocks kept under farm conditions. The foundation of the herd should be well graded ewes which will shear a fairly heavy fleece and at the same time produce a lamb which will fatten readily and dress out a good percentage of high class mutton. Selection and breeding should include these two objects.

"I once heard your wife recite 'Few Shall Not Ring Tonight,'" said the remonstrant friend.

"Yes," responded Mr. Meekton, with a smile of confident approval. "And I take notice that the crew has gone out of business."—Washington Star.

AUCTION SALES

This week on page two we advertise the sale of Hiram Brock, live miles southwest of Charlevoix on the Boyne City-East Jordan road, Monday, October 9, 1911, beginning at 1:00 o'clock p. m. E. B. Ward, auctioneer, Fred White, clerk.

On page 4, we advertise the sale of E. A. Reed, two miles south of Charlevoix, on the county road, Wednesday, Oct. 11, beginning at 1:00 o'clock p. m. W. E. Ryers, auctioneer. E. A. Butler, clerk.

HEAVY FIRE LOSS.

Hiram Brock of Eveline Loses Barn and Contents.

Saturday morning, about two o'clock, the night operator in the Charlevoix telephone exchange discovered fire in the direction of Ironston, and called up some of the people in that vicinity to learn where the fire was. On being aroused it was found to be the barn of Hiram Brock, which was totally destroyed together with the contents, consisting of about twenty tons of hay and quite a few farm implements. The origin of the fire is unknown. Loss is estimated at $2,000. Insurance $950 in the Patron's Mutual.

AT BOYNE CITY.

L. E. Crandall Engages in the Grocery Business.

The Boyne Citizen says: "Joel Johnson has just closed a deal by which the grocery stock and fixtures owned by Joseph Flint has been purchased by L. E. Crandall. The building which still remains the property of Mr. Flint will be rented by Mr. Crandall and the business conducted at the old stand."

Mr. Crandall is well known in this city, and his friends wish him all success in his new occupation.

SECOND PRODUCE EXHIBIT

Will be Held at Fagan Bldg Wednesday, October 11.

Prizes Given for Grain, Potatoes, Sugar Beets and Apples.

Wednesday, October 11, the Charlevoix Retail Merchants' Association will hold another exhibition of farm produce. Premiums will be given for the best display of grain, potatoes, rutabagas, sugar beets and different varieties of apples.

The show room will be in the Fagan building, formerly occupied by the Palace Clothing Store. The success of these exhibits last year, and the one held September 21, in demonstrating what Charlevoix county land can produce is proof that a display will be given that will be worth going to see.

It is hoped that farmers will co-operate with the merchants and make this exhibit the best of the series. Poultry fanciers are invited to bring their fowls and place them on exhibit.

The merchants of Charlevoix will offer special bargains in all lines for the day, and it will pay you to come to Charlevoix. See premium list on another page of this issue.

Grange at Chestonia.

Deputy Grand Master Fred C. Warner has returned from a trip through Antrim county in the interest of the grange. He succeeded in reorganizing the grange at Chestonia, Antrim county, which has been dormant since 1905. This grange starts out anew with a good membership and the indications are that it will prove to be one of the strongest organizations in the county within a short time. Mr. Warner also addressed the Forest Home Grange on the subject, "The Grange as an Educator." There seems to be a strong sentiment in favor of the grange in this part of the state, and during the coming winter there will be several new granges organized and placed on a good working basis. Modern conditions have shown the farmers the necessity for organizing and they are confident that the desired results can best be secured through the grange. Traverse City Record Eagle.

CONTEST GETTING INTERESTING

Who Will Get the $10.00?

Nothing is more talked about in this community at present than the great prize voting contest inaugurated by the Courier and voted in great demand. The town and country are being scoured for them and the merchants who are giving prizes are continually being asked for coupons.

To win a magnificent $400 Upright Piano will be the privilege of some lady in this vicinity. To secure some of the other big prizes offered will be the privilege of other young ladies in the contest and work is required to win, that's all.

The Courier offers this opportunity to its readers and friends. The following gentlemen have offered to act as judges of the contest: Mayor Hampton, Superintendent of Schools DeVoe and J. M. Fells, which will be held October 18, 1911. The key to the ballot box which is now installed in the office is in their hands and they will have charge of the locking and unlocking of the ballot box at the time of the contest. They are honest men and of good standing in the community and will have charge of counting the ballots and awarding the prizes.

Many people are willing to help their friends and are only waiting to be asked. The first candidate to ask of course will be the one to get the assistance of friends. Those who desire to enlarge their count should get out and hustle.

Let each contestant show the people that she has the determination to succeed in anything she undertakes and that she is out to win.

First count in the contest will be made October 18 at which time $10 in gold will be awarded to the contestant having the largest number of votes at that time.

Use the free coupon in this issue. Don't hold your coupons beyond the date they are valid. Every Courier coupon is dated and specifies for how long it is good. Every contestant should report and vote their coupons, at least once a week. Read the rules and regulations published on second page of this paper and govern yourself accordingly. Some contestants are going to receive the present and you can help decide who they will be.

Get busy and vote for your choice. The contest will be conducted squarely and no partiality shown to anyone. Do it now and help some one reap the benefits of this liberal offer.

RETURNED VISIT

East Jordan Firemen Our Guests Saturday Night.

Banquet at Elston—Stormy Evening but Enjoyable Time.

Saturday evening the East Jordan firemen returned the visit made them by their Charlevoix brethren a short time ago.

Although the night was not all that could have been desired, about fifty came over from our neighboring city, many of the firemen being accompanied by their wives. The East Jordan band also came along to add to the pleasure of the evening.

The visitors were met at the dock by the Charlevoix boys and escorted to the fire hall where a short social session was held, after which dancing was enjoyed until midnight when a banquet was served at the Elston, which was so fully enjoyed, as all affairs of a like nature are at the Elston, that only time was found for one speech, Mayor Hampton delivering the address of welcome, and the benediction.

Taken altogether it was a very enjoyable evening and was the forging of another link in the chain, which binds the different parts of Charlevoix county together in fraternal ties, all working in union for Charlevoix county all the time.

Harmony Grange No. 1451.

Harmony Grange is not dead nor sleeping as the enthusiastic meeting held last Tuesday evening proves. There was nearly a full attendance of members and three visitors.

The "Fair" committee reported that with four granges competing, Harmony Grange took first prize on vegetable exhibit, with a much better exhibit than last year.

The following delegates were elected to the county convention to be held next Tuesday, Oct. 3, with Pine Lake Grange: L. D. Wilson, James Watt, J. A. Newville, Mrs. Mabelle Wilson. Alternates chosen were Mrs. E. Coykendall, Mrs. W. C. Bartlett and Mrs. Myrtle Wilson.

The Woman's Work Committee reported a meeting held last week with Mrs. Viola Wilson, and announced another to be held on Wednesday, Oct. 4, with Mrs. Myrtle Wilson.

A special children's meeting was also announced for Saturday evening, Sept. 30, the children to furnish the program.

A fine program of readings, recitations and music was rendered, ending by roll call, responded to by each member giving the motto by which he tries to live. Some very original mottoes were given, but all course all were good.

A lunch was served to top it all off.

TUESDAY NIGHT

Republican Hosts Will Gather in Charlevoix

CHARLEVOIX COUNTY REPUBLICAN CLUB

Puss Palmer will Officiate as Toast Master

Governor Osborn, State Chairman Knox, Senator Scott, Hon. A. L. Duell Will Respond to Toasts.

The officers of the Charlevoix County Republican Club are laboring day and night to make the Second annual banquet of the club, to be held at Baker's Inn next Tuesday, one of the biggest things in the line of political love feasts ever held in Northern Michigan. When we remember the first annual banquet held at East Jordan last year we realize that to eclipse that effort means a lot of hard work.

The business session of the club will be held prior to the banquet, in the hotel parlors, and, as before the clans gather again, the national campaign will be well under way, every republican who has the welfare of the party at heart should be present.

After the business meeting the banquet will be in order. Puss Palmer, who has no superior in the state, will officiate as toastmaster, while Gov. Osborn, State Chairman Knox, Senator Scott, Hon. A. L. Duell and other prominent speakers will respond to toasts.

Under the primary election law these banquets furnish the only means for the gathering together of the political hosts and should be attended by all who take any interest whatever in the political movements of the day.

CHIEF SATAGO DEAD

Most Noted Historic Personage in Northern Michigan.

With the death of Chief Satago at St. Ignace last week there passed away the most noted and historic personage in all northern Michigan.

Chief Satago or Mistago, as the tribe called him, was the last great sachem of the once powerful Chippewa nation and the last remnants of the tribe are little more than memories of its former greatness. Chief Satago was one hundred and eight years old at the time of his death. Long since dispossessed of his hunting grounds in the straits regions, the deposed monarch's later years were those of penury.

Chief Satago was a veritable living epic in himself. He was until recent years a rare raconteur of early life in the great northwest. Faithfully recorded in his memory were ancient legends, songs, history and traditions of his people. These were handed down to him from untold generations by Chippewa chiefs.

"Alias Jimmy Valentine"

figure that appeared was, and at the same time it was not, that of Red Flanagan, whose photograph adorned not less than five rogues' galleries.

The uniform—that was it. The blue-gray coat and trousers, loosely fitted, and the peaked cap, bearing in gold letters "Watchman," were the actual causes of his transformation, so far as outward indications were concerned. As for the inward changes—those quite hidden from the human eye—well, there were but two persons who could describe how they had come about. Those two persons were Red Flanagan and Jimmy Valentine.

Red stood before the assistant cashier and doffed his imposing watchman's cap.

"Want me, Randall?" he asked.

"Yes," he looked away from Red, unwilling to break to him the news that Doyle was on their track.

CHAPTER XII.

"GEE," went on Red enthusiastically, "not appreciating the reason for Valentine's silence, 'gee, but that kid is a great kid! Ain't it funny how a kid like that will get hold of a tough old tramp like me?"

"Nice child," commented Valentine. He picked up the telegram and handed it to Red.

"Read, read that," he said dully, as though discouraged.

"The other read in silence."

"Doyle! Good heaven!" he exclaimed.

"Doyle," said Valentine. "It took him quite a while to uncover us, didn't it?"

"But he's finally done it—got your name and everything."

"Did you notice it wasn't signed?"

"Yes. Who do you suppose tipped you?"

"Doyle," was Valentine's amazing response.

"Doyle!" cried Red, starting at once. The assistant cashier bent toward the watchman.

"Doyle sent that, Red. Don't you see he's not sure of me? But if I ran away from the bank when that telegram came out of town for the afternoon—he'd know he had me."

"Never thought I'd have ducked," commented Red. "And now he'll turn me up too. I'm going." He flung his hat nervously.

"You're not. He don't want you, and if you stay where you belong he won't see you."

Red nodded his head decisively.

"I'll stay closer to the bank than an emigrant to his tug. And you, Jimmy?"

Valentine smiled as the other lapsed off in his excitement into using his old name.

"Jimmy? How natural that sounds, Red!" he said enthusiastically.

"Excuse me," murmured Mr. Randall, protesting.

"No. It's all right, only don't by any chance use it before Doyle, because I'm going to alibi Doyle until he'll think he's lost his eyesight."

"Alibi?" repeated Red curiously.

"I've heard of that before."

"Alibi, that's it, Red," replied Valentine. And he continued rapidly:

"You haven't forgotten the one greatest refuge of the crook, have you—our old friend the alibi? Something which proves you were not where you were when something happened."

"It's never Jimmy Valentine, Red. I was never Jimmy Valentine. I've been straight all my life and can prove it. I've been waiting for Mr. Doyle nearly three years, and I've got him beat. I never did that job in Springfield, Massachusetts. I was never there in my life. And if I've got to use the crook's tools to beat it I'm justified. I'm living straight and I'm going to, and all the gods are with me, Red."

He took a scrapbook from a drawer and opened it. "Look at that. For five years you will find clippings of Lee Randall when he lived in St. Paul. That man was my cousin. He went to Alaska and never came back. He's also Lee Randall, and I defy Doyle to prove he ever saw me."

Valentine, out of breath owing to the long speech he had delivered at top speed, leaned back and gazed raptly at Flanagan. The latter stared unblinkingly at the assistant cashier, trying to guess as to whether or not he was telling the truth. Well, there was a scrapbook. That would afford ready means of proving Valentine's words. Red picked up the book and swiftly scanned the pages. His attention was held by one of the clippings. He read aloud:

"St. Paul News, March 12, 1906: The speaker of the evening was Mr. Lee Randall. His subject was—"

"Look at that other one," interrupted Valentine, pointing. "See how they join up with the day I came here."

And Avery has sent me something that will make Mr. Doyle's eyes blink like an owl."

Red laughed grimly. The telephone bell rang.

"Avery! Did you any Avery?" asked Red.

"Yes," picking up the receiver. Then to the operator: "Yes, send Mr. Cronin right in. There's a friend of his here who wants to see him." He looked significantly across at Red.

Flanagan glanced around the room, then at Valentine. "Say," he began.

"I'm the only one here in the room except you, and I don't want to see any 'Mr. Cronin.' Don't know him. Who is he?"

"Mr. Cronin," responded Valentine. "Is the man who is going to save you and me from going back to state prison."

Valentine went on to recount to Red how Bill Avery, after he had said goodbye to his "pals" in Albany, had gone to the middle west and eventually married a widow of middle age, whose son was an expert photographer, one who operated a large studio in St. Louis and employed men who specialized in covering important events for the newspapers and magazines.

"Avery?" ejaculated Red. "Avery working—absolutely on the square?"

"Yes, that's the truth, the awful truth," laughed Valentine whimsically.

"But you say Bill Avery is married?" asked Red, completely overcome at the suggestion.

"Yes, it's all true, and Bill has proved a true friend to me—to us," answered Valentine.

"And he's really happy?" went on Red doubtfully. "His as always had a stubble of filly's spendthrift's coin. He's happy with one wife?"

The assistant cashier gave vent to a burst of gaiety at the astonishment of the watchman, who probably would have understood the process of reformation in any one but Bill Avery.

But a few minutes elapsed after Valentine answered the telephone call before the door opened, and in came a man whose iron gray hair curled beneath the rim of his high silk hat.

Clad in bright yellow kid gloves adorned his hands—his frock coat, of the latest make, was a bit worn on the edges, and it was for that reason that the secondhand dealer had made a reduction in price to Mr. Cronin.

The newcomer laid a handsome gold-headed Indian bamboo walking stick across a chair, took off his gloves and faced Valentine and Red.

"Mr. Randall?" he said.

"Yes, Mr. Cronin,"

"Cronin be bowed," cried Red, starting forward. "It's Bill Avery. How about you, old pal?"

Avery, pleased at the enthusiastic welcome and at the sight of both of his old friends, shook hands with each. Then he drew back and looked from one to the other. "Think of us three being left alone together like this in a real bank," he said significantly, and his two hearers could not restrain the laughter at the thought of what the circumstances would have meant to them in days now put behind them.

"Did you get the picture?" asked Avery of Valentine. "You told me to send it, but I wanted to see you. That double negative is a wonder."

Valentine looked understandingly at him. He rose from his chair, picked up the telegram from his desk and extended it to Avery.

"Yes; it's all right," he said. "And it came just in time. Today is the day I'll need it," pointing to the telegram. "Read that!"

Avery read the message. The pal of an unassuming fear came upon him. His head dropped forward and he glanced apprehensively about him. His hand trembled as he laid the paper on the desk. He sank hopelessly into a chair. "Doyle!" the old man choked—"Doyle! He said he'd slough me, and now he'll do it—or else he'll make me pay blackmail. You never can tell how much a copper wants for keepin' quiet."

"Oh, don't get blue," encouraged Valentine. "He doesn't want you fellows. It's me that he is after."

He examined a large photograph which Avery had sent him. It showed the tables and guests at a large banquet in a luxuriously appointed restaurant.

"Yes, I think this saves me," he remarked. He held it before Red, asking, "What's this?"

"Flashlight of a banquet?"

"Who is this on the right of the toastmaster?" pointing at a face in the picture.

"You."

"Pile the date," went on the assistant cashier. "Pile it, Red. Do you remember where I was on that date?"

He gazed curiously at Red. Avery watched the proceeding with rare interest.

The watchman became thoughtful. At last a puzzled wrinkle marked his forehead. "Why—why—you were—in—Sins—Sins—Sins—ou—that—date," he replied confusedly.

Valentine and Avery laughed in their superior knowledge.

"No, no," protested Valentine. "This photograph proves it was at a banquet in St. Paul. I'll bet Doyle and I'll make him like it."

"You can't," was Avery's pessimistic comment.

"You said we couldn't go square any of us, and we all have," was Valentine's rejoinder. "And if we can beat the thing inside of us that tells we can beat one man that hunts."

A clerk knocked on the door and entered to ascertain if he should now bring in a trayful of cash which Valentine was to count. He was ordered to do so at once, and Avery's face became a study as the young man soon re-entered with a tray on which new banknotes of large denominations were piled among glistening rows of gold coin.

"Great snakes, what a chance!" exclaimed the one time thief, looking from Valentine to the watchman. "This is no place for me. On, just for one grab and the quick getaway!"

He mopped his wrinkled brow. "I'm sweating like a polar bear on the Fourth of July."

"Haven't got it out of your blood yet, eh?" asked Valentine.

"Not the craving for real money. I learned to let the wheat in the grain elevator alone after a month or two, but coarse money like that—wow!"

The old man stared fascinatedly at the enticing tray.

"Well, we watched each other for awhile," commented Red, pointing to his chief.

"And ain't neither of you ever snatched even one bundle?" asked Avery incredulously.

"No."

"Well, you better get me out of here. I'm going to have lockjaw in both hands in a minute." He reached for his hat and stick.

"No, you're not," put in Valentine. "Come on, Red," he said, walking to the vault room door. "I'm going to prove to Bill that he's honest. He's going to watch that money till we come back."

Avery cried out in protest, but Red followed his superior, and the three went into the vault room. The watchman, who had confessed to his friends the weakness that he well knew yet lurked within him, was left alone in the banking office before a tray containing $25,000 in cash. With a reach was the door leading into the open hallway through which it was but a few seconds' dash to the busy street, where a man would immediately be lost to view in the passing throng.

"It's a dirty trick," muttered the old man, starting after the others. A shaft of yellow light reflected from one of the golden coins caught his eye, drove into his very brain, into the thin red blood that coursed through his hardening veins. He stopped. He turned full around and slowly, with hands eagerly outstretched, looked back to the table bearing the precious burden. His brows narrowed down over his pale gray eyes, his fingers, long talons in their curved fixedness, began to nervously twitch. Then Avery jerked himself away of a sudden. He straightened himself up and started toward the vault room door to summon Valentine. But even as he did so his glance roved back to the alluring tray. He was drawn to it as the nerveless rabbit that succumbs to the hissing charm of the oscillating head of the hungry python.

He stepped to the tray. He seized two packages of hundred dollar bills, thrust them into his pockets, then clenched two more. The door had him. His eyes shone with the fire of gone days and gone nights. His polished blood sung through his veins. Then he stepped once more. He raised his hand.

"And here the coppers after me again," he murmured thoughtfully. He laid down a package. "And double cross a pal that put me straight. Not me, not me!" He replaced the remainder of the money. "And coin that comes crooked never was any good."

Avery stood before the tray of money. Now he looked at the tempting fortune with the sure knowledge that he had conquered—that he had faced his greatest test and had not been found wanting.

The thought of how narrowly he had escaped committing the meanest crime of his career came over him, and he realized that he had been on the verge of plunging himself into the death dealing life from which Valentine had rescued him. Ungovernable rage possessed him at his insane lapse into the self that he had cast from him. He swung his fist at the neatly stacked piles of gold pieces.

"Curse you, curse you!" he cried in frenzy. The tray and its contents crashed to the floor and the money scattered in all directions.

Valentine and Red, hearing the noise, came rushing in from the vault room. They saw the floor littered with banknotes and coins. And crouching forlornly in a chair was the figure of old Bill Avery. His hands were pressed over his eyes, and he sobbed in the agony that gripped the soul which had been restored to him.

Literary Notes

A Kansas Town With a Woman Mayor and a Woman Police-man.

A Kansas town now has a woman mayor, a woman city marshal and a woman city clerk. The October Woman's Home Companion, in its "About People" department, says: "If Chicago's motto is, 'I Will' the motto of Kansas seems to be, 'Why Not?' For example no other town had elected a woman to the mayorality; but the voters of Hume, Kansas, saw in that no reason why they should not do so, especially if the woman happened to be the best man. And when they had chosen Mrs. Ellen Wilson as mayor, she quickly justified their confidence in her vigor and independence. First Mrs. Wilson started the community by appointing another woman, Mrs. Rosie E. Osbourne, city marshal with instructions to preserve order, to clean house, and to enforce the laws restricting the sale of liquor. Mrs. Osbourne is six feet tall, weighs nearly two hundred and fifty pounds, and is said to fear neither man nor mouse. Mrs. Wilson also appointed Mrs. E. E. Hilton town clerk. Like many another reform mayor, Mrs. Wilson has found her city council in stubborn opposition to her every move; but she is very popular with a large element upon whose moral and political support she depends to enable her to make good the second half of her declaration that 'Hume' is no worse than a lot of other towns—but it is going to be better than most of them. Mrs. Wilson owns a home in Hume, and several farms in Oklahoma and Kansas, and, as her husband is a invalid, has long been accustomed to manage her own affairs unassisted. She has two sons—one twenty, the other fourteen years old."

ONE MILLION DOLLARS FOR A GOOD STOMACH

This Offer Should be a Warning to Every Man and Woman.

The newspapers and medical journals recently have had much to say relative to a famous millionaire's offer of a million dollars for a new stomach.

This great multi-millionaire was too busy to worry about the condition of his stomach. He allowed his dyspepsia to run from bad to worse until in the end it became incurable.

His misfortune serves as a warning to others. Everyone who suffers with dyspepsia for a few years will give everything he owns for a new stomach.

Dyspepsia is commonly caused by an abnormal state of the gastric juices, or by lack of tone in the walls of the stomach. The result is that the stomach loses its power to digest food.

We are now able to supply certain missing elements—to help restore to the gastric juices their digestive power, and to aid in making the stomach strong and well.

We know that Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets are a most dependable remedy for disordered stomach, indigestion, and dyspepsia.

We want you to try them and will return your money if you are not more than satisfied with the result.

Three sizes, 25 cents, 50 cents, and $1.00. Remember, you can obtain Rexall Remedies in this community only at our store. The Rexall Store, The Ivy Drug Store, Frank N. McCall, Prop., Charlevoix, Mich.

GOOD ROADS BEING BUILT IN COLORADO BY CONVICTS

State Saving at Least $100,000 by Making Criminals Do Work.

By putting its convicted criminals "on honor" and allowing them to do road building—such service to the state gaining them commutation of sentence—Colorado seems to have gone a long way toward solving the highway problem and the problem of the unemployed convict at one and the same time.

About half the convicts in the Colorado state penitentiary at Canyon City are employed in road work. The prison population varies from 700 to 750, and it is estimated that the labor thus secured to the state means an actual cash value of at least $100,000 per year, not to speak of solving the vexing question of keeping criminals employed without collecting with free labor.

It costs about 25 cents a day to keep a convict in a road camp as against 12 cents a day in the penitentiary. The men must have better food when engaged in such hard manual labor, and this forms the chief item of added expense. But even this expense has been saved to the general taxpayers of Colorado, as the counties through which the roads are built contribute the extra 24 cents per day per man. This tax is gladly borne by the counties, as they receive most of the benefit from the construction of the roads.

TAFT INTERESTED IN GOOD ROADS.

In a recent letter President Taft expresses his interest in good roads as follows:

"I have a very intense interest in the development of good roads in the country over, and I am very glad to know that the movement in favor of this improvement has taken such national form as to indicate the widespread feeling of the necessity for giving to the residents of the country as distinguished from the city a facility for intercommunication that will greatly add to the comfort of living in the country and will increase the profit of the producer and farmer by reducing the cost of his initial transportation."

A GOOD EXAMPLE.

Two North Carolina Farmers Are Constantly Dragging Roads.

An example worthy of emulation is that set by Grimes Bros., farmers and millers, of Lexington, N. C. These gentlemen own a big farm north of the city, touching the city limits. A short stretch of the road through this farm has been macadamized, but so well is the whole kept that it is impossible to tell without very close attention just where the line that strip of macadam ends and the clay begins. The road for more than a mile north of the city is almost perfect, smooth, level and dry in all sorts of weather, and the secret of its fine condition is the road drag. After every hard rain a team and drag go over the road, and it is thereby kept in almost perfect condition.

In striking contrast to this road is the road just beyond the farm of these good citizens. Ruts and holes abound, and travel ceases to be a pleasure and becomes a positive discomfort to man and beast. The road drag did it all.

All of this work has never cost the county or township a penny. These gentlemen have furnished the labor and teams and have done the work "without reward or hope of reward." It is their hope that the example which they have set will spread.—Southern Good Roads.

Roads in a Small Town.

In the southwest corner of Reno county, Kan., is the town of Turon, which the 1910 census report gives a population of 412. Some eighteen months ago a commercial club was organized in Turon, says the Kansas City Star. Its roll now numbers 163 members. Since its organization four miles of four foot cement sidewalks have been built in Turon.

A sidewalk on both sides of the street extends from the Missouri Pacific depot to the Rock Island depot, a distance of half a mile. All the side streets are improved with similar walks. Some time ago Turon built a new schoolhouse. It was located about nine blocks from the business section, and a cement sidewalk was laid from the business part of the town. That's the way they do things in Turon and may in part explain why Turon has increased in population 62 per cent since the last census was taken.

BANQUET WAS GRAND SUCCESS

Enthusiasm Ruled at Republican Club Banquet Last Night.

ROMEO A. EMREY ELECTED PRESIDENT

State Chairman W. Frank Knox Gave Principal Address.

Many Other Speakers on Program—W. J.
Pearson Proved Success as Toastmaster—Attendance Large.

If anybody had any doubt as to the enthusiasm of the republicans of Charlevoix county, they were swept aside last night. The second annual banquet, held at Baker's Inn last evening, was a continuous evidence from start to finish that Charlevoix county republicans are very much alive, and the adoption of direct nominations, in no way, prevents the gathering together of republicans and the planning for party success.

While some disappointment was felt over the absence of some of the speakers, the arrangements were as near perfect as could be and were a tribute to the hard work of Secretary Robbins and President McMillan.

The dining room was most beautifully decorated with autumn leaves. The guests entered to the strains of music by Davidson's orchestra. The gathering was called to order by President McMillan, who called upon Rev. H. A. Putnam for the invocation, after which the good things claimed the attention of the republicans. Host Beaubien had his arrangements well in hand and kept up the reputation of Baker's Inn gained under its former proprietors.

After the cigars were lighted, Hon. W. J. Pearson, "our own Bill," was introduced as toast master, and right well did he fill that important position.

The first speaker introduced Hon. W. Frank Knox of the Soo, who, as chairman of the state central committee, has demonstrated his powers as an organizer, delivered a thoughtful address on the work which lays before the Republican party in Michigan, calling particular attention to the enactment of a measure providing for the separation of state and county taxes, and the enactment of an employment liability law. When Mr. Knox referred to Governor Osborn as a possible successor to President Taft four years from now, the applause which rang out proved how strong our governor is with Charlevoix republicans.

Short addresses were also given by Hon. A. L. Duell of Harbor Springs, Hon. D. H. Hinkley of Brant, Hon. H. S. Emerson of Elk Rapids, and many others.

The Wilkinsons furnished vocal music during the evening, which means the best was enjoyed, and the East Jordan and Charlevoix bands were also present.

At the business session R. A. Emrey of Charlevoix was elected president, Roy H. Taylor of Boyne City secretary, and Dr. Conkle of Boyne Falls treasurer. Mr. Emrey is a hard worker and we believe no better choice could have been made.

The large attendance from Antrim county was much appreciated by Charlevoix republicans and they heartily endorsed Representative Emerson's declaration that Charlevoix and Antrim were one.

Chairman Knox made a great many friends, and if a reapportionment measure is passed, his boom for congress will not be forgotten in Charlevoix county.

ISSUES WARNING

Whooping Cough and Measles Most Dangerous Diseases

Of Childhood—State Board of Health Issues Warning.

The importance of preventing wide spread epidemics of whooping cough and measles does not appear to have been sufficiently impressed upon the minds of the public. There are a number of diseases which receive much more attention from the public in proportion to their importance from the standpoint of mortality record, than do these.

In the last five years in Michigan, there have been 1,500 deaths charged to whooping cough, and 1,022 charged to measles. These numbers do not properly indicate the high rate of mortality as from these two diseases. This is because a great number of cases have been reported to have died of pneumonia, of which upon closer investigation, show to have had measles or whooping cough preceding the pneumonia. Such deaths should be charged to whooping cough or measles.

The importance of these diseases, as considered by the medical profession, is well shown in the following resolution adopted by the Calhoun County Medical Society recently:

"Resolved, that the Calhoun County Medical Society, in regular session in the City of Marshall, appreciates the fact that 'Pertussis' (whooping cough) is one of the most fatal of the contagious diseases of childhood. Resolved, that the Calhoun County Medical Society do hereby express its desire that through the efforts of the State Board of Health, and the various health officers of this state, the public may be better instructed in the dangers of this disease, that the disease may be reported, that stringent quarantine regulations be enforced.

The policy which we too often find, of allowing children who have whooping cough to attend the public schools, is an entirely wrong one, and one which must not be tolerated. A child with the whooping cough or measles should be given just as careful attention by their parents and physicians as a case of scarlet fever. The regulations of the State Board of Health provide that children who have whooping cough or measles, also children who live in a household so as to be exposed to whooping cough or measles, must not attend the public schools or any public gatherings. This is a regulation which is rather extensively not complied with in this state, and it is this failure to so restrict the cases which accounts for the large number of deaths.

It is especially urged that the public in general take more active precautions against these large epidemics, such as whooping cough and measles. It is the duty of the physicians in charge of these cases, or of the householder in case that there is no physician in charge, to report these cases to the local Health Officer. It is his duty to forward the report to the State Department. Failure to comply with these requirements constitutes a

SPECIAL BONUS OFFER GOOD UNTIL FIRST COUNT

It Holds Good Until First Count, Wednesday, October 18
When Votes Will be Counted and a $10 Gold Piece will be Awarded to the Lady
Having the Most Votes

The big prize voting contest is attracting more attention every day, so as an incentive to all contestants we have decided to give the special bonus votes.

For every seven renewal subscriptions 3,000 extra, making a total of 6,500.

For every seven new subscriptions 4,000 extra votes, making a total of 8,200.

For every seven back subscriptions 2,500 extra, making a total of 4,800.

The above special bonus offer will hold good until the first count on October 18, at which time the votes will be counted by the judges, who will award the $10.00 in gold to be given the contestant who receives the largest number of votes up to the first count.

Remember, the $10.00 in gold to be given the contestant having the largest number of votes on October 18 is a special prize offered by the Courier and it will in no way effect the standing of the winner of the contest.

A few contestants have thought that the winning of the $10.00 would affect their votes for the piano. It will not. All votes found in the box on October 18 will be included in the final count, which will decide the winner of the piano and other prizes.

No votes will be received after 8:00 o'clock p. m., Tuesday, October 17, until the ballot box is delivered to the judges for the first count.

Remember that each subscription you receive—either new, renewal or back, you get a certain number of votes with each year and these votes and an extra bonus votes also.

The prize piano has been ordered and will be shipped in a week or ten days.

Remember to have your friends trade with merchants who are given coupons.

The following young ladies have been nominated in this contest.

BOTH WENT AGROUND.

Missouri and Illinois Have a Rough Experience Friday.

The Missouri went aground Friday morning between Round Island and Bois Blanc Island in Lake Huron. The tug Schenck and Sabin, of the Soo, were sent to pull her off, reaching her at eleven o'clock. Owing to the heavy seas, however, the tugs were unable to pull on the stranded boat. Saturday morning she was released after both the Soo tugs and the St. Ignace tug, Algoma, had pulled on her. She suffered no damage, whatever, and has resumed her regular trips.

The Illinois ran aground Friday morning about four o'clock while trying to get into Northport harbor. Tugs worked all day Friday and she was finally released about eight o'clock Saturday morning. No damage was done and she is again at her regular work.

GRAND-DISPLAY

Of Michigan Grain, Fruit and Other Products.

Will be Made at First Land and Apple Show November 7.

Michigan patriotism is bound to mount high as the result of the First Michigan Land and Apple Show, to be held at the Coliseum, Grand Rapids, Nov. 7 to 11. The great display of Michigan fruit, Michigan grains, and Michigan products of various kinds, together with the splendid presentation of the resources of the state, is certain to make any wolverine proud of the land of promise and achievement in which he has his home. This is to be distinctly a Michigan show, for the benefit of the whole of Michigan, and with all the people pulling together to make the world awaken to Michigan's present advantages and future possibilities.

Besides the extensive displays, every county is to have an opportunity to set forth its own advantages in a lecture that will be a part of a notable series of talks, continuing all through the show, A. L. Dehl of Harbor Springs will represent Emmet county with one of his interesting talks on fruit. To make these talks possible, the Land and Apple Show management this week contracted for 10,000 square feet of additional floor space, in the large two story annex to the Coliseum, now in the process of erection. The annex will also be used for the round-up institute with state and national speakers, for agricultural, horticultural and development lectures, for stereopticon talks, and for other supplementary purposes. Hours will be set aside for all counties applying to the Land and Apple Show management for time in which to tell their stories. The securing of the annex illustrates how the show is expanding far beyond the original expectations. It will now have the largest floor space of any indoor show ever held in Western Michigan.

The Michigan Passenger Association has recognized the importance of the Land and Apple Show to all of Michigan and has granted a reduced round trip rate of one and one-half fare on all railroads. This reduced rate has hitherto been accorded only the two state fairs at Detroit and Grand Rapids.

Prize Day Exhibition.

A large crowd is in town this afternoon attending the prize exhibit of the Retail Merchants Association. A fine display of late apples, potatoes, and roots is on exhibition. A nice showing is also made of corn. The grain display is rather weak. Several have entered bread for the prizes offered by the Argo Milling Company.

Temple Theater Opening.

East Jordan's new theater will be opened to the public Tuesday evening October 17, Madame Sherry being the attraction. There will be excursions from this city and many are planning on attending.

Entire County Has Now Been Re-assessed,
Except Township of Peaine—Increase Is General.

The state tax commission has come and gone, having re-assessed every part of the county, with the exception of Peaine township, which will be taken up later. Wednesday, Thursday and Friday of last week the board sat as a board of review at Boyne City, East Jordan and Charlevoix, and while several appeared before them few were able to convince the commission that their assessment was too high.

The general opinion seems to be that while the assessment is high and several mistakes were made, the county, as a whole, is equalized better than ever before. The table below tells the story.

ELECTION IS ORDERED

Charlevoix County will Vote on Question of Local Option.

Thousand Dollars Appropriated for Advertising the County.

The supervisors met in regular October session Monday. Three new faces appeared on the board, from the city of East Jordan. Monday the petitions for an election on the question of local option were presented to the board and referred to a committee consisting of Meek, Hughes, McCune, Osborn and Correll. The committee reported a total of 1311 signers to the petition and the election was ordered.

The board voted an appropriation of $100 for the Charlevoix County Agricultural Society and $100 for the Western Michigan Development Bureau, $100 of which will be used in preparing and publishing a booklet advertising the agricultural resources of Charlevoix county.

The rest of the time has been taken up with routine business.

Germs Spread in Skin

Eczema, Psoriasis and other skin troubles are caused by myriads of germs at work in the skin. Unless these germs are promptly destroyed they rapidly multiply, gnawing their way deep into the sensitive tissue. This is what causes that awful itch and what seemed a mere rash may grow worse and develop into a loathsome and torturing skin disease with its years of misery.

Don't take any chances! Destroy the germs at the beginning of the trouble with that soothing and cleansing wash, the D. D. D. Prescription for Eczema. A 25c bottle will prove this to you.

We have had experience with many remedies for skin trouble but have never seen such remarkable cures as those from D. D. D. Prescription. Instant relief from the very first application.

We are so confident that D. D. D. will reach your case that it will cost you nothing if the very first full size bottle fails to make good every claim. If you have skin trouble of any kind, we certainly advise you to drop in and investigate the merits of D. D. D. anyway. We know that D. D. D. will help you.

Charlevoix Readers—Can No Longer Doubt the Evidence.

This grateful citizen testified long ago.

Told of quick relief—of lasting benefit.

The facts are now confrmed.

Such testimony is complete—the evidence conclusive.

It forms convincing proof of merit.

Mrs. G. Wikel, 303 South Elmwood Ave., Traverse City, Mich., says: "Kidney complaint clung to me for a long time and made my life miserable. My limbs and joints were sore and I had all the aches and pains that generally accompany a bad case of kidney trouble. Finally, after trying several remedies without being helped to any extent, I commenced using Doan's Kidney Pills. They benefited me at once and before long had effected a complete cure. I know from experience that Doan's Kidney Pills act just as represented."

On August 6, 1909 relief proved permanent. Mrs. Wikel was interviewed and she added to the above: "I have no occasion to take a kidney remedy since Doan's Kidney Pills cured me. You are at liberty to continue the publication of the testimonial I have previously given in their praise."

Literary Notes

"Why He Is Lonely."

Thousands of people, having read of the vast fortunes made by those who write the so-called popular songs, have tried to accumulate riches and fame by writing lyrics and composing music. The mail bags of Jerome H. Remick & Co., probably the largest music publishing house in the world, are flooded with manuscripts by ambitious song writers. All are carefully looked over, but the percent age of those accepted is decidedly small; yet once in a while they receive one that amply repays them for all their trouble. Thus the new song, "Maybe That is Why I'm Lonely," came into their hands, and it has proven such a success that the writers, Nesses Goodwin and Meyer, have suddenly become renowned. A little love story with a strong heart interest is told by a lad in the song, who cannot understand why he is lonely away from the sweetheart, who even while she is with him, gives him very little encouragement. He tries to account for it in the simple clauses which we quote. "The music is especially appealing, and both lyric and melody combined are what is termed by the publishers a 'double' inspiration song."

CHORUS.

Maybe that is why I'm lonely,
Maybe that is why I'm sad,
That you keep trying to have me sighing,
You can drive the blues away,
With any loving word you say,
Dear,
Come on, honey, cuddle closer,
Act like other sweethearts do,
If I only knew, dear, you were lonely to, dear,
I wouldn't feel so blue.

HELPFUL HINTS ON HAIR HEALTH

Scalp and Hair Troubles Generally Caused by Carelessness.

Dandruff is a contagious disease caused by a "microbe" which also produces baldness. Never use a comb or brush belonging to someone else. No matter how cleanly the owner may be, these articles may be infected with microbes, which will infect your scalp. It is far easier to catch hair microbes than it is to get rid of them, and a single stroke of an infected comb or brush may lead to baldness. Never try on anybody else's hat. Many a hat-band is a resting place for microbes.

If you happen to be troubled with dandruff, itching scalp, falling hair or baldness, we have a remedy which we believe will completely relieve these troubles. We are so sure of this that we offer it to you with the understanding that it will cost you nothing for the trial if it does not produce the results we claim. This remedy is called Rexall's "43" Hair Tonic. We honestly believe it to be the most scientific remedy for scalp and hair troubles, and we know of nothing else that equals it for effectiveness, because of the results it has produced in thousands of cases.

Rexall's "43" Hair Tonic is devised to banish dandruff, restore natural color when its loss has been brought about by disease, and make the hair naturally silky, soft and glossy. It does this because it stimulates the hair follicles, destroys the germ matter, and brings about a free, healthy circulation of blood, which nourishes the hair roots, causing them to tighten and grow new hair.

We want everybody who has any trouble with hair or scalp to know that we think that Rexall's "43" Hair Tonic is the best hair tonic and restorative in existence, and no one should scoff at or doubt this statement until they have put our claims to a fair test, with the understanding that they pay us nothing for the remedy if it does not give full and complete satisfaction in every particular. Two sizes, 50 cents and $1.00. Remember, you can obtain Rexall's Remedies in Charlevoix only at our store.—The Rexall Store, The Ivy Drug Store, Frank N. Metcalf, Prop., Charlevoix, Mich.

DAIRY COW FEEDING.

Maintain the conditions the same throughout the year as found in the early part of the summer. These conditions are described as follows: An abundance of palatable food, balanced ration, succulent ration, moderate temperature, comfortable surroundings.

The following statements indicate in general the amounts to feed:

Feed all the roughness the cow will eat up clean at all times.
Feed one pound of grain per day for each pound of butter fat produced per week or one pound of grain daily for each three pounds of milk.
Feed all the cows will take without gaining in weight.

The Mississippi River. John L. Matthews in his "The Conservation of Water" says that 100,000 men standing on the banks of the Mississippi with shovels and an unlimited supply of rich earth at hand and tolling twelve hours every day 365 days in the year could not throw into the Mississippi as much soil as the river annually carries into the gulf of Mexico.

JIMMY VALENTINE, WARDEN HANDLER AND ROSE LANE.

CHAPTER XIII.
"I TOOK—some of—that money," Avery finally managed to say as he saw his two friends before him. "And you put it back," said Jimmy Valentine. "The minute you touched it you found you couldn't." "That's it," put in Avery eagerly as he arose and proceeded to add Red in restoring the scattered money to its place. "I couldn't take it then. Now I can go out of here and know that I'll never steal again." "You mustn't go until Doyle comes in, for he might see you on the street," warned Valentine. "When he comes you can go out through the vault room and make your getaway while I stall him here." In talking with Avery, Jimmy Valentine unconsciously fell into the use of the vernacular of his early voca- tion.

With a parting handshake Avery went out into the vault room, where Red was to exhibit to him the big new safe. The assistant cashier, now that the tray of money had been re- placed on the table, picked up the photograph, hung it in the place of another seized to the wall at the right of his desk and inspected it with pronounced satisfaction. The hall door opened, and Rose Lane came into the office. The girl was in a peculiar mood that day—there was no denying it. Valentine had always found his benefactor, young though she was, particularly difficult to fath- om, and today she was more baffling than ever. She talked at length re- garding her plans for the children's Christmas celebration, and, standing before his desk, while he stood behind it, she said, "And I want to know what you want for Christmas." "Is there anything I could want?" he answered in low tones. "Think of what you and two short years have done for me." "And there's never anything more you want? Don't you ever dream—dreams of, say, two years more?" She turned her eyes to the door. "Oh, yes, to go on as I've been going these last two, since your father gave me a position of trust, and make ev- erything good and pile up the money for you." She drew away from him. "Haven't you ever thought there might be something I want more than money?" Valentine hesitated. His voice be- came intensely serious. "I don't let myself think of you only as your employee," he finally answer- ed.

Rose turned sideways to him, so that he could not see her face as she delivered her next question, although she would have given much to have been able to watch the expression of the assistant cashier—her assistant cashier—as she asked it. "But," she ventured, "you must have thought that I would marry some day." Silence, with Valentine fumbling in embarrassment a pencil which lay upon his desk. "Yes," he began, but Rose con- tinued his sentence for him. "And it irritates you to think of it, doesn't it? Say it." "Y—es." "Go on." He could endure the situation no longer. The girl had penetrated his very soul with her questions, had un- covered in Jimmy Valentine the se- crets of his new life—the secrets which he had resolved to keep buried forever. But now he must speak. He must tell her the truth about his situ- ation as regarded her—part of the truth, at least. "And the thought of you brings darkness, desolation," he said, keep- ing a firm grip on the emotions that threatened to unnerve him. "What is the use? You're all there is to live for—to just see you now and then. You're all there is to live. Men have loved and slaves have loved and animals never have been saved have loved, but never were the three loves fused in one. And you're good, and your life is clean, while mine—but you know all that." He inclined his face from her. "I have forgotten," she said simply. "You cannot. And any day the shadow of other days may fall, but I want you to know this and believe it as your God—my love for you is a holy thing, sacred and deathless." Valen- tine was looking earnestly into her eyes now. His hand was resting on the desk. She seized it in hers and drew him toward her. "Take me in your arms, Lee," she cried fervently. "I love you. I'll love you till—" Her face was upraised to his as she clung to him. He held her that have been saved have loved, but never were the three loves fused in one. And you're good, and your life is clean, while mine—but you know all that." He inclined his face from her. "I have forgotten," she said simply. "You cannot. And any day the shadow of other days may fall, but I want you to know this and believe it as your God—my love for you is a holy thing, sacred and deathless." Valen- tine was looking earnestly into her eyes now. His hand was resting on the desk. She seized it in hers and drew him toward her. "Take me in your arms, Lee," she cried fervently. "I love you. I'll love you till—" Her face was upraised to his as she clung to him. He held her

HE KISSED HER AGAIN AND AGAIN.

"Well, just don't—just don't," plead- ed Rose. "I am going to leave the chil- dren here to take care of you." "Rose," he cried, going to her. "Rose. It was chance that brought us togeth- er, it was chance that brought you to a prison one day. Chance is uncer- tain, capricious, and that same chance may separate us suddenly."

"Nothing can separate us," con- fidently. "Let that be our prayer to all the gods. But this I want you to remem- ber—from my soul—I love you. Now go."

She kissed her hand and waved it toward him as she went out of the door.

"Goodly, Rose." He stood a moment; then, taking down the telephone receiver, he said into the mouthpiece: "Hello. All right. Send the gentle- man in." After a pause: "What? He's gone into Mr. Lane's office? The telephone receiver fell to the desk with a crash. Doyle went into the of- fice of Mr. Lane, Rose's father. Here was a new complication, a new dan- ger, one which Jimmy Valentine had not included in his calculations. Well, come what may, he must face the situa- tion.

"Miss Taylor—Miss Mabel," he called, taking up the receiver and asking for the "central" of the bank's private exchange, "give me Mr. Lane's office. Hello, Mr. Lane. Oh, now regarding that German note, he says that he— Oh, you are coming into my office now with a Mr. Doyle? All right. I'll be here. Very well. Goodby."

The receiver clattered into its wont- ed position on the hook, and Jimmy Valentine stood at his desk awaiting the arrival of Rose Lane's father and Detective George Doyle.

CHAPTER XIV.

AFTER a few moments Valen- tine again glanced at the photograph of the dinner group. Next he opened a drawer at his left and took out a square green book with the legend "Scrap Book" in fancy green letters on its cover.

He placed the volume in a drawer at the right of his desk and on top of it laid several other books taken from another drawer. He slammed the drawer shut, straightened himself and walked across the office to the table on which was laid the tray of gold, silver and greenbacks.

"I'm going to beat you, Mr. Doyle," he said fiercely, half aloud. "I'm go- ing to beat you, and I'm going to make you like it."

He seated himself before the tray and began counting the money as the door opened to admit Mr. Lane, fol- lowed by Detective Doyle.

Valentine looked up. "Mr. Randall," began Rose's father, "this is Mr. Doyle, a detective, who has been asking me some questions about you that I feel you can better answer."

"Indeed?" looking at Doyle. "What is the name?" Valentine asked in- nocently.

His attitude made Doyle snort with anger. "Doyle," the detective granted im- patiently, staring at the man he had known as No. 1280.

Valentine rose and shook hands with Doyle. "Glad to know you, Mr. Doyle."

He seated himself before the tray. "Well, what can I do for you?" he asked.

The detective's mouth gaped open. He glared at the smoothly speaking, indifferently acting ex-convict before him, then at the tray containing thou- sands of dollars in bills and coin.

Valentine went on counting the money as unconcernedly as though playing a game of jackstraws with Bobby or Kitty.

"What can you do?" exploded Doyle. "You can do nine years for."

"You will excuse me," interrupted Mr. Lane, stepping toward the door. "I have no interest in the conversa- tion. I am sure. And, Mr. Doyle," he said pointedly to the bewildered de- tective, "I want you to thoroughly un- derstand that I have every confidence in Mr. Randall, as also have all the other directors." The door closed be- hind him and Valentine was alone with George Doyle.

"Well, I'll be damned!" ejaculated Doyle, turning again to the assistant cashier. "You're in pretty sweet here, aren't you?" pointing to the tray. "I really didn't expect to find you here in the daytime."

"Why?" perplexedly. "Oh, I thought you'd duck when you got my wire."

"Wire? Oh, did you send that tele- gram?"

"Yes, Jimmy."

"Jimmy? What's the idea? I don't follow you."

"Oh, you don't know, eh?" angrily. "Got the old boy—Lane—stalling for you, and you're going pretty strong, eh?"

"Exactly what do you mean?" asked Valentine indignantly, rising as he spoke.

"Come on, Jimmy, not with me. Sorry to tear you away from so soft a place, but the state of Massachusetts wants you."

"From the occasional words of Intel- ligible English you speak from time to time," retorted Valentine easily, "I gather that you imagine I am a per- son named Jimmy." His words were accompanied by the most aggravating of smiles.

The now thoroughly true detective bent toward the assistant cashier and peered intently at him.

"Imagine—imagine! Well, isn't it funny that I should imagine your name to be Jimmy?"

"It is, indeed," suavely. "As a mat- ter of curiosity, might I ask Jimmy's other name?"

Stateroom No. 24

A Coincidence Leads to Serious Results

By F. A. MITCHEL
 Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

"All right, sir," said a steward of the liner Polyhemnia, scheduled to sail in two hours. "This way, sir." And, seizing Mr. Jones' hand baggage, he led him to stateroom No. 24. Flipping the door open, there were a trunk and hand baggage, ladies' wraps and other articles, while on the stand was a bouquet of flowers.

"What's this?" growled Mr. Jones. "This is the main deck, isn't it?"

"Yes, sir."

"And No. 24?"

"Yes, sir."

"Well, what's this baggage doing here?"

"I don't know, sir. I'll go to the purser's office and see."

While the steward was away Mr. Jones examined the baggage to see where he could see the name painted on the end, he was astonished. There was his own name with the prefix of a Mrs. before it—"Mrs. E. R. Jones."

Mr. Jones had no wife, but no idea of taking a wife and wouldn't have a wife if she brought him a fortune. At the same time there was a peculiar feeling at seeing woman's paraphernalia in his stateroom—that is, all except the flowers, for on examining a card attached to them he saw that they had been sent by a man, and this brought a tinge of jealousy. A fur lined cloak lay on the berth, umbrellas and parasols were strapped together, and baskets, some of them marked with the letter J, were on the floor.

Then Mr. Jones got a scare. When a young man, while roistering with a lot of boys and girls, he had gone through a mock marriage ceremony. He had been told afterward that the girl was meditating an attempt to prove the ceremony legal, and it had worried him. Suppose that she had since concluded to take his name—what a frightful supposition. But, no; that $500 fur lined cloak could never belong to Becky Stoddard. And yet he did not know what changes had come to her as well as himself. She would now be forty years old and might have acquired means. Perhaps Mr. Jones was forty himself, but at that age men do not usually covet women so advanced in years.

While these things were passing through his mind, the steward came back with a record of assignment of rooms which showed No. 24 to have been given to Mr. and Mrs. E. R. Jones.

"There's a blunder here," said Mr.

Jones. "I am E. R. Jones, but I have not a wife, and, what's more, I don't want one."

Now, it is a well known fact that our destinies are often turned in this and that channel by some trifling circumstance. Mr. Jones, happening to turn his head after saying with great acerbity that he didn't want a wife, saw standing in the aisle a very pretty woman looking him straight in the eye.

She had heard him say that he had no wife. If this were all perhaps the statement would have been of no importance. But she had also heard him say that he did not want a wife. This part of his remark acted upon the lady like a slap in the face. Outwardly she did not retaliate. Inwardly she made up her mind that if she got an opportunity she would make him eat his words.

"In this No. 24?" she asked.

"Yes, ma'am," replied the steward.

"Has my baggage been put in?"

"There's baggage here, ma'am."

"Mrs. Jones' baggage?"

"Yes, ma'am."

"There's been a mistake, madam," said Mr. Jones, doffing his hat and showing a small bald spot on the top of his head—"a very curious mistake. My name is Jones, not Jones."

"Indeed?" said the lady in a tone which indicated that she fully understood the situation.

"And, singularly enough," continued the gentleman, "I have the same initials that are on your trunk. I am Edward R. Jones."

"Indeed?" the lady again said, not intending to convey any meaning.

"An odd circumstance, isn't it, that two persons of the same name should be assigned the same room?"

"Very."

"And still more remarkable that one should be Mr. and the other Mrs.?"

"Quite so."

"It affords me great pleasure, I assure you, to give way to you."

"You are very kind, but I think it would be more just to discover to whom the room really belongs. Steward, can't you bring the purser here?"

"I think so, ma'am. The crowd isn't coming aboard yet."

The steward went for the purser, and the lady, entering the room, the door of which was hooked open, invited Mr. Jones to sit down, but he chose to remain standing. It occurred to him to ascertain whether the lady were wife or widow.

"I wonder," he said, "if your husband's initials stand for the same name as mine. I am Edward Richard Jones."

"My husband's name was Edwin R. Jones."

"Ah, I see! There is a difference after all."

The lady looked at the name on the card attached to the flowers, sniffed at them and, choosing a rose, took it out of the water pitcher and handed it to Mr. Jones. Mr. Jones bowed, smiled all over and endeavored to put the stem in his buttonhole. Failing in the attempt, Mrs. Jones inserted it for him, bringing her round white fingers in close proximity with his lips. He could scarcely refrain from kissing them.

The steward came back with the purser, who said a room had just been given up which Mr. Jones could have, to which Mr. Jones assented; then, bowing very low and backing respectfully out of the stateroom, he left the lady looking after him with a curious expression on her face. It was a blank look in one sense and one full of meaning in another. It meant a great deal, but Mr. Jones could not interpret it.

There was one circumstance connected with the brief meeting that meant a great deal. That was the bestowal of the rose. It enabled Mr. Jones to address Mrs. Jones, when he met her again, on friendly terms. Without it he would have felt constrained to wait for her to speak to him. As it was the day after sailing, the weather being fine and the ocean smooth, Mrs. Jones being on deck in her stateroom chair, Mr. Jones approached her, doffed his cap and entered into conversation. The sun was glittering on the water, merry young men and maidens were playing shuttlecock, the deck stewards were handling 11 o'clock bouillon—short, Mr. and Mrs. Jones were in the midst of one of those scenes of idle comfort that are afforded by an ocean liner when old Boreas is asleep.

Though Mr. Jones was still young, she was a widow and even before marriage had had a natural insight into the management of men. It was her design to make herself attractive to Mr. Jones, and how did she go about it? Did she charm him by the depth or brightness of her conversation? No; she let him talk to his heart's content, she drinking in every word he was saying. The only subject she seemed able or at least willing to discuss was the singular coincidence of a Mr. and Mrs. E. R. Jones, who were not married and had never seen each other before having been assigned to the same room. She kept harping on this subject, thus leading him to dwell on it till he began to wish he was married. And once a man begins to wish for the double state and his ideas of a partner in that state become fixed on any one woman it is merely a question of time with him, provided the woman consents.

They were taking the Mediterranean trip, and there were thirteen days during which Mr. Jones couldn't get away from her without jumping overboard. She made no mention of the remark she had overheard. He had not attached any especial importance to her having heard it and had already forgotten it himself. It did not occur to him that so small a thing was to be the turning point in his whole life.

Mr. and Mrs. Jones parted at Naples to meet again at Venice. Moonlight on the Grand canal was the cause, subsidiary to that of the stateroom, which turned Mr. Jones from a bachelor to married man. He proposed in a gondola to the sound of music from floats, or, rather, Italianus screeching out of date songs. Love, moonlight and the entrancing scene made the soaps seem delicious harmony. But Mr. Jones didn't need romance to plunge him into matrimony. He had some one to drag him there. He awoke to a consciousness of having, after all, wanted a wife.

But the question that troubled Mr. Jones was, Did the widow wish a second husband, and if so did she wish him to fill the position? All that Mr. Jones could get out of her was that she would take his proposal under consideration. She was going to Switzerland, where she would remain until a few days before sailing from Genoa. If he could meet her in that city she would give him his answer.

Mr. Jones spent the rest of his sojourn in Europe not in sightseeing, but in waiting. A week before the sailing of the vessel on which the widow was to return to America he appeared at Genoa and fretted and fumed till the widow appeared. Meanwhile she had concluded that she wanted Mr. Jones more than revenge. She gave him a decided "Yes." They were married at once, and the same evening went aboard the steamer.

"Upon my word," exclaimed the groom, "she's the Polyhemnia!"

Mrs. Jones led the way to their stateroom. On reaching it her husband made another surprised remark:

"And stateroom No. 24?"

GAS ENGINE MUFFLER.

Simple Device For Reducing Noise of Exhaust.

Many farmers and mechanics have gasoline engines which are objectionable on account of the noise from the exhaust. This noise may be entirely done away with by the use of the simple muffler pictured herewith.

Two barrels are connected by a pipe of the same size as the pipe that leads from the exhaust. Four small pipes are screwed into the top of one barrel, and the exhaust pipe is fastened in the top of the other. Both barrels are buried so their tops are about six inches below the surface of the ground.

This muffler will stop the noise entirely, and on account of its size it will not reduce the power of the engine, which the smaller ones have a tendency to do.

Smoke Burning Grate.

What is hailed as a great improvement in the construction of grates for furnaces, has been recently attained by a Canadian inventor, Abies Stiebert, which is said to be so effective that the poorest Bohemian coal, which is a very soft kind, may be burned with an efficiency of a little less than 85 per cent. The grate is entirely novel in its design and really consists of two grates, one above the other. From the top one there issues a blast of hot air, which beats down the smoke and soot from the fire, driving it back into the flames so that it is entirely consumed. One of these grates has been in operation for a period of twenty-six months in the municipal slaughter house at Christened, and it is said that there is not the slightest discoloration to be seen inside the chimney.

Metalized Paper.

Metalized paper is being manufactured by a German process as a substitute for the foil. Ordinary paper is treated with a mixture of finely powdered metal and resin and then subjected to friction, with the result that it becomes as flexible, brilliant and impermeable as sheets of tin foil. Wax or an alcohol solution of gum may be used instead of the resin. In making the tin foil paper either pure tin or a powdered state may be used or a mixture of aluminum powder and tin. The final polishing is done by cotton darning, which, hitherto always done with heated rollers, is accomplished in this process by means of refrigerated rollers.

PETOSKEY WINS

In Good Fast Game in this City Saturday.

Score 10 to 5 in Favor of Visitors—Line-up Looked Good.

Saturday the Charlevoix high school football team met on the gridiron in this city the "One Petoskey" high school team in a good battle in which Petoskey capped the honors. There was a fair sized but enthusiastic crowd present. The referees of the game were Leo Powers of this city and Mudgett of Petoskey, and Leo Powers acted as time-keeper. Jack Papinaw acted as head line-man.

The game was played in 15 minute quarters. Charlevoix had the first kick off. No points were made until the third quarter when Petoskey scored a touch down at the hands of Warren. In the next plays Hamill also scored a touch down for Petoskey. Charlevoix made a touch down when a forward pass was made that hit a Petoskey man thus enabling McGagh to get the ball and score. No goals were kicked by either side.

Many forward passes were made that were failures also many fumbles that crippled both of the teams. Charlevoix's back field were the feature part of the team work. The line was as follows:

Petoskey. Position. Charlevoix.
Welling.....L. E.....Taylor
Koepe.....L. T.....B. Durance
Sullivan.....L. G.....D. McGagh
Osborne.....C.....Thomias
Ferguson.....R. G.....Skye
Leo.....R. T.....C. McGagh
Clapper.....R. E.....N. Durance
Adams.....Q. H.....Mitchell
Hamill.....J. H.....Poole
Atkin.....F. H.....Knick
Warren.....R. H.....Kirby

Knick was the acting captain during this game for Charlevoix and Durance and Scroggie exchanged places at right end during the game as well as C. McGagh and Withers changing places at right tackle.

Charlevoix has an open date for Saturday and may play Hellaire at the latter city.

What Ruined Rome.

What ruined Rome was not the barbarian invasion, but, first, a declining birth rate and the dissolution of the marriage tie; second, overwhelming taxation, especially on the land; third, the introduction of a caste system through government action; fourth, the attempt of the state to act as a universal providence; fifth, the endowment of blindness, and, sixth, the neglect of national defense by the refusal to train the population to arms and by reliance solely on a professional army. —London Spectator

PLOWING MATCH

Was a Big Day and Quite Well Attended.

Score of Contests in Plowing—Big Dinner Enjoyed.

Charlevoix was deserted Thursday nearly everybody having gone to Ironton to the first annual plowing match held under the auspices of Ironton Grange. To say it was successful is unnecessary. Charlevoix county is famed for its plowing matches and Ironton Grange demonstrated its ability to pull off as big a day as the event has been heretofore, when held under the auspices of the other granges. In the first place providence seemed to be on their side, and Thursday was the first and in fact the only perfect day we have had this season.

The plowing was warmly contested, as the score shows, and the prize winners took home a goodly amount of prizes.

The big event, of course, was the chicken pie dinner, which had been waited for so long by our townsmen. In fact Ald. Nordrum was in such a hurry that he tried to fill his pockets. Dr. Armstrong was missed, but Dr. Thelen upheld the reputation of the medical fraternity for storing away enormous dinners. The aprons and quilts sold well at the auction and the grange ladies realized a goodly sum from that source. The field day sports were hotly contested, and the dance in the evening was a financial success. The score of the plowing follows:

A TOMBSTONE STORY.

The man who lies beneath this stone Was a fanatic on germs. He knew the whole microbia With its long Latin terms.

He saw germs on sweet ladies' lips And taboos of oclusion Of course communion he refused. Fearing contamination.

In eggs he saw a billion germs. In milk, in butter, beef, Were microbes multitudinous. Septillions past belief.

The milky cow had germs by stacks; The tomato was alive; The rooters had their toes all full; Old Towser was a hive.

He saw them on the baby. And he saw them on the calf. The ring tail pig was tousy full, As was his better half.

To him the whole world was a germ. Himself, of course, accepted, And so he thought the universe Should be well disinfect.

He sprinkled lime in his wife's shoes. With acid sprayed the town And armed himself with great squirt guns To hunt those microbes down.

But, oh, did microbes kill this man, Or did he die in bed? My, no! He went to spray a mule And got kicked in the head.

C. M. BARNITZ.

KEEP THE WATER FRESH AND PURE.

It's a wonder some one doesn't knock the egg man for putting water into eggs.

Talk about the milkman milking the pump! Why, the egg farmer puts 45% per cent of water into every egg and gets 25 cents for water every time he sells a dozen for 40 cents.

But we've seen no one kickin' high jinks about it, but we fear some fellows might get kicked if customers saw the kind of water they force their hens to drink to make that 45 1/2 per cent of egg.

But some believe a hen is a natural born filter; that she can eat and drink any kind of rot and her miraculous mechanism sifts the germs right out and retains only the pure elements for her system, flesh and eggs.

They claim "hens are dirtier than hogs," and so they keep them on the hogpen plan, and rot begets rot.

But others believe Job's doctrine. "Who can bring a clean thing out of an unclean? Not one."

And they also believe "blessed are the merciful, for they shall obtain mercy," and they practice this toward the creatures around them.

Pure, sweet water is one of God's great gifts to men, but millions die every year because of its pollution.

Polluted water kills fowls old and young, retards growth and makes eggs and market poultry bearers of bacteria.

DON'TS.

Don't put the poultry raising on a parlor and then pocket the proceeds. Let her handle the cash and there'll be no crash. It's fair to the fair.

Don't let your turkeys roam over your neighbor's farm to do harm. Friendship is more precious than turkey meat, so follow the Golden Rule and all keep sweet.

Don't keep eggs too long before setting. Ten to fifteen days the limit.

Don't keep a hen that will go over the fence into your neighbor's garden. Pardon such a hen or give her the ax for such acts.

Don't hatch too many chicks. They'll be crowded, die or not grow. You'll get disgusted and busy.

Don't waste brains and huddle on every newfangled theory that you read of. It may read pretty on the page, but later will make you weep and rage.

Don't talk much. "Talk is cheap," but too much of it makes one weep.

Don't neglect to feed greens both summer and winter. They assist digestion, furnish nutrients, make eggs and meat and are very cheap feed.

Don't lay in meat food for winter without knowing its protein content before selecting. Remember that spoiled meat product poisons poultry.

GROWTH OF SUGAR INDUSTRY

In the State of Michigan During the Past Twelve Years.

FARMERS WILL RECEIVE MILLIONS

Sugar Beet Land Has More Than Doubled in Value.

The Consumer Has Shared in Benefits Resulting From Establishment of Industry.

The Detroit Times, of recent date, contained a resume of the sugar industry in Michigan, which will bear careful reading by Charlevoix county farmers. The editor of this paper has seen the land value increase as told in the article and believes that the continuation of the sugar industry in this county will result in an increase here.

The Times has had an opportunity of observing and recording the growth of the beet sugar industry in Michigan and has no hesitancy in saying that the development of that industry during the past twelve years is the most important fact in the agricultural life of the state during that period. Twelve years ago Michigan was sending $10,000,000 out of the state each year for the sugar which its people consumed. The value of the sugar crop harvested in Michigan this year will be fully $15,000,000. This makes a difference of $5,000,000 in striking the state's balance sheet at the end of the year.

Twelve years ago there was one factory in the state of Michigan. Today there are sixteen. Formerly farmers were loath to raise beets. The number of factories in Michigan has not materially increased during the past five years but the slicing capacity of these factories has increased during this time fully 25 per cent, and plenty of beets are being secured for this enlarged capacity. Forty thousand Michigan farmers have turned their attention to this new line of agriculture, and for this year's crop will receive fully $5,000,000.

The Times has seen the value of beet lands adjacent to the factories increase from $30 an acre to $150 an acre, and has seen the rental value of such land increase from $2.00 per acre to $12.00 per acre. It has seen mortgages paid, farms bought, barns built, and houses erected from the proceeds of the beet crop.

Twelve years ago Saginaw Valley, devastated of its timber, faced a future with little hope. Today it is the garden spot of Michigan. Farms in that section command a better price, are under a higher state of cultivation, and have better buildings than in any other part of the state. The merchants declare that their sales are better and collections easier in the Saginaw valley than elsewhere. No matter where you go in the beet belt of Michigan the citizens unite in saying that the beet sugar industry has worked the transformation.

During these twelve years the ultimate consumer of the sugar in Michigan has shared in the benefits resulting from the establishment of the industry within the state. The sugar produced in Michigan is equal in quality to that made anywhere in the world. It has usually been sold in this state at from 20c per hundred pounds to 25c per hundred pounds less than the price of Eastern sugar. This season the benefit to the consumer is most marked. Every factory in the state has sold all the sugar it can make during the month of October at about 2c per pound less than the high September price of Eastern sugar. It is interesting to observe that the only time during the twelve years in which the people in the United States have had to depend absolutely on the supply of foreign sugar is the interval from the first of August to the middle of October of this year. For these months the price has been higher than any other time during the past 12 years. As soon as the domestic sugar reaches the market the consumer will be relieved of this burden and will be given his sugar at a reasonable price. The occasion for the recent and present high prices is that the Cuban crop the past year was some 400,000 tons short, while the crops of duty free sugar which come to the United States were only normal. This forced the refiners to go to Europe for 400,000 tons of sugar which they were obliged to buy at a time when the European prices were high on account of a prospective shortage of 15,000,000 tons in the European beet crop. Those who think it would be a good thing to destroy the domestic beet and cane industries of the United States may well consider the condition that would prevail at the present time if there were no domestic sugars to relieve this situation. The safe thing to do is to double the amount of sugar raised in the United States as quickly as possible and thus relieve our people from the necessity of buying any sugar abroad. We could then maintain a reasonable price in the United States irrespective of any European conditions.

AT FIVE O'CLOCK

Popular Charlevoix Young People Joined Together

Miss Jean Gail Cruickshank Weds Peter Vandermade.

Today at five o'clock occurred the marriage of Jean Gail, daughter of Mrs. A. D. Cruickshank, and Peter Vandermade, Rev. H. A. Putnam, pastor of the Congregational church, officiating in the presence of about eighty invited guests.

Miss Jane Cunningham of Boyne City presided at the piano and Mrs. W. J. Rachow sang, "I Love You Truly" as the bridal party, Miss Cruickshank being accompanied by Miss Marion Harris and Mr. Vandermade by Gale Hines, preceded to the altar through a lane formed by Clara and Hildegard Wilkinson and Richard and Billy Bob Paddock holding ribbons. Katherine Fitch was flower girl and Margaret Fitch, ringbearer. The bride was given away by A. L. Fitch. The decorations were bride's roses and chrysanthemums.

After a wedding luncheon, Mr. and Mrs. Vandermade took the evening train. They will be at home after November 1, at 400 Michigan avenue.

Probably Mr. and Mrs. Vandermade have a larger circle of friends than any other two young people in our city. Mrs. Vandermade is a graduate of our public schools and the Mt. Pleasant Normal. With the exception of a few years spent in Colorado teaching, her life has been spent among us.

Mr. Vandermade is the right hand man of Captain Wilbur, at the express and steamship office, where his courteous and obliging manner has made him the friend of everybody.

MRS. AMOS WEBSTER WINS $10.00 GOLD PIECE

A Hustling Lady of Charlevoix Runs Ahead on the First Count Today

Miss Edith Adams Second and Many Other Contestants Running Neck and Neck—Excellent Chance to Yet Win the Grand Prize—Another Special Prize to the Two Contestants Making the Greatest Gain in Votes Between Now and Next Count—Also Special Bonus Votes Given for Next Few Days.

The Courier's grand piano contest is fairly teeming with interest. The first count held today disclosed that over 120,000 votes were cast in all and the awarding committee consisting of Mayor Hampton, Superintendent of Schools DeVoe and J. M. Felts were nearly two hours counting the votes. While twenty-three candidates have entered the contest with a will, considerable interest was manifested in the five candidates, Mrs. Amos Webster, Miss Edith Adams, Mrs. Lee Smith, Miss Anna Madill and Miss Faye Wagner, all of whom secured over 10,000 votes.

Several other candidates also received handsome votes from their many friends.

Mrs. Amos Webster received the highest number of votes and was awarded the $10.00 in gold. Miss Edith Adams was a close second.

All the candidates are very much in the contest yet and the next count will probably show changes. Don't forget to ask for coupons of the merchants co-operating with us in this contest.

Here are the bonuses:
For every seven new yearly subscriptions 8,000 extra votes, a total of 14,000 votes.

For every seven renewal subscriptions 8,000 extra votes, a total of 11,000 votes.

For every seven back subscriptions 6,000 extra votes, a total of 8,800 votes.

For every 40 merchants coupons brought to this office and counted by the publishers or his assistants a bonus of 500 extra votes will be given, a total of 1500 votes.

TWO CASH PRIZES
In the two ladies making the greatest gain in votes between now and the next count on November 17, we will give $15.00 in gold, $10.00 in first prize and $5.00 as second prize. This gives every one the same chance for no matter if you have not as yet received any votes and you make the greatest gain in votes you will get the $10.00 in gold and the contestant making the next highest gain in votes will get the $5.00 in gold.

The list of votes and certificate of the judges follow:

The undersigned judges, who were asked to count the votes in the Courier Voting Contest, hereby certify that we have counted the ballots in the locked box, this 18th day of October, and find that the result was as follows:

Mrs. Amos Webster	30,025

MICHIGAN INDUSTRIES.

Our State Leads in Fruit, Copper and Automobiles

Second State in Production of Sugar Beets—Produces Two-thirds of Nation's Beans.

Michigan leads the world in several respects. It probably produces fully fifty per cent of the world's copper supply. Its furniture goes to every quarter of the globe, and it furnishes more of that commodity than many other states combined. It ranks first in the value of farm products generally. The Michigan apple, peach, potato, beet and wheat have long been in demand, and still supply innumerable markets. One state only exceeds it in the manufacture of beet sugar. It has 7,000 square miles of coal lands, with a monthly output of over 50,000 tons. In lumber, iron ore, charcoal, iron, salt, cement, hardwood forests, gypsum, seeds, paints, varnishes, manufacturing and industries, the State of Michigan takes either the foremost place or closely follows her superiors in the matter of production. The more recent industry of automobile or motor car manufacture has placed it at the head in that line throughout the world. That Detroit is the logical place for the world's automobile center can be better understood after considering the following points: For years it has outclassed its competitors in the manufacture of radiators; in the building of cars; in turning out bodies for carriages and wagons; in the building of boats and watercraft of all kinds; in sheet brass and copper products; in paints and varnishes; it had at command all the finer and desirable woods; everything in the line of necessities or requirements in connection with the new industry was in abundance at its very doors. The first automobile factory in Detroit was established in 1899. This industry has grown to mammoth proportions and today exceeds every other one in the city—Christian Science Monitor.

MINING PROPERTY RAISED

State Tax Commission Boosts Local Assessors on Mines.

Of a total of 101 mining properties in Marquette, Iron, Gogebic and Dickinson counties the figures of the local assessors were increased by the state tax commission in all but four cases.

Summarizing the conclusions reached by the commission President Robert Shields of Houghton says: "There was no essential disagreement on the statement to the effect that Prof. Finlay's valuation of the iron mines is not excessive. The most vigorous discussion was waged around the tonnage estimates and the expectations of the life of the individual property now stands assessed as follows: Marquette, $34,800,000; Gogebic, $28,343,100; Iron, $15,040,000; Dickinson, 7,447,500.

The assessor's figures formerly were: Marquette, $3,015,030; Gogebic, $1,943,154; Iron, $1,993,500; Dickinson, $3,738,300.

SECOND PRIZE DAY

Held Last Wednesday Brought Out Fine Display

Fruit Took Lead—Good Show of Grain and Vegetables.

The second prize day and exhibition held Wednesday of last week, under the auspices of the Retail Merchants association was, like the former shows, a success. As in the previous exhibitions, fruit took the first place, the showing of late apples being grand. The high color, size and general perfection of the apples shown cannot be excelled, in our opinion, anywhere else on earth.

Almost on a par with the showing of fruit was the exhibition of potatoes and roots, while the grain and corn was proof that Charlevoix county soil can grow anything to perfection.

The following shows the prize winners:

Wheat—1st, Geo. Meggison; 2nd, Martin Staley.

Oats—1st, Nat Burns; 2nd, F. W. Smith.

Rye—1st, George Ager; 2nd, Nat Burns.

Corn—1st, Will Burns; 2nd, Geo. Meggison.

Potatoes (round)—1st, Will Heise; 2nd, Howard Fairbanks.

Potatoes (long)—1st, Frank Boss; 2nd, Ed. Boss.

Potatoes (largest)—Frank Supernow.

Ruta Bagas—1st, George Brown; 2nd, R. S. Shapton.

Sugar Beets—1st, Henry Barber; 2nd, Fred Seymour.

Pie Apples—1st, F. H. Clarke; 2nd, Phil Howe.

King Apples—1st, Earl Clark; 2nd, Will Myers.

Wagner Apples—1st, Floyd Bartholomew; 2nd, F. H. Clark.

Snow Apples—1st, F. H. Clark; 2nd, Will Withers.

Display five varieties, one peck each—1st, Earl Clark; 2nd, H. C. Newman.

Special prizes for best loaf of bread from White Rose and Iron Duke Flour were awarded Mrs. Geo. Trimble and Mrs. James Hogert.

Cost of Keeping Poor of the County the Past Year

W. A. DeVoll Elected Superintendent of Poor—L. A. Butler, Member Board of School Examiners.

As we went to press last week the supervisors were busy with committee work.

The Soldiers' Relief Commission reported that they had expended $107.97 during the year. An appropriation of $600 was made for the commission.

L. A. Butler of Boyne City was elected a member of the board of county school examiners to succeed himself and W. A. DeVoll of Boyne Falls was elected superintendent of the poor to succeed Frank L. Pearson.

The superintendents of the poor made their report, showing an expenditure of $9,072.28 during the year. The following amounts were expended in the different townships for the relief of the poor:

Bay, $15.00; Boyne Valley, $219.70; Charlevoix, $43.71; Chandler, $12.40; Eveline, $16.70; Evangeline, $66.00; Hayes, $69.99; Hudson, $43.77; Marion, $5.00; Melrose, $69.10; Norwood, $6.00; Peaine, $180.56; South Arm, $136.15; Wilson, $15.77; Boyne City, $759.70; City of Charlevoix, $612.91.

A new scow was ordered bought for the Ironton Ferry.

The committee on detention home recommended the purchase of the Miller property adjoining the court house lot for the sum of $3,000 but this matter was referred to the committee to hire a matron and house.

Tuesday morning the special order on the submission of the adoption of the county road system of the spring election was taken up and the proposition to submit carried by a vote of 18 to 7. Those voting against were Supervisors Osborn, Burnett, Correll, Taintor, Starnier, Boyle and Gallagher.

TWENTY-EIGHTH CONVENTION

At W. C. T. U. at East Jordan on October 25 and 26.

The twenty-eighth annual convention of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of the eleventh district of Michigan will be held in the M. E. church, at East Jordan, October 25 and 26. Meeting will be opened Wednesday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock. Miss Margaret Bilz, who was a delegate to the World's W. C. T. U. convention at Glasgow, Scotland last year, will address the audience in the evening. Thursday evening there will be a "Grand Gold Medal Contest." We hope to have a large delegation from Charlevoix—Mrs. Jepson has kindly arranged to give a round trip rate of fifty cents on the "Hum" to visiting delegates.

A STITCH IN TIME.

Charlevoix People Should Not Neglect Kidneys.

No kidney ailment is unimportant. Don't overlook the slightest backache or urinary irregularity. Nature may be warning you of approaching dropsy or fatal Bright's disease. Kidney disease is seldom fatal if treated in time, but neglected paves the way for serious kidney troubles. Don't neglect a lame or aching back another day. Don't ignore dizzy spells, irregular or discolored urine, headaches, weariness or depression. Begin treating the kidneys with the reliable, time-tried remedy, Doan's Kidney Pills. For 75 years Doan's have been curing sick kidneys and curing permanently. Endorsed by grateful people.

George Bertrand, 228 No. D. St., Charlevoix, Michigan, says: "I can recommend Doan's Kidney Pills highly. Three years ago I was laid up with a lame back. I doctor and tried a number of remedies, but did not receive relief until I used Doan's Kidney Pills. The contents of three boxes completely cured me and I have had no return attack of the trouble. I keep Doan's Kidney Pills in the house at all times, and whenever I see them, good results follow."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster-McBarn Co., Buffalo, N. Y., sole agents for the United States.

CONFIDENCE

We Back Up Our Statements With Our Personal Reputation and Money.

We are so positive that we can relieve constipation, no matter how chronic it may be, that we offer to furnish the medicine free of all cost if we fail.

We think that it is worse than useless to attempt to cure constipation with cathartic drugs. Cathartics may do much harm. They may cause a reaction, irritate and weaken the bowels, and make constipation more chronic.

Constipation is often accompanied and may be caused by weakness of the nerves and muscles of the large intestine or colon. To expect a cure you must therefore tone up and strengthen those parts and restore them to healthier activity.

The discovery of the active principle of our remedy involved the labor of skillful research chemists. This remedy produces results such as are expected from the best of the best-known intestinal tonics, and it is particularly prompt in its results.

We want you to try Rexall Orderlies on our guarantee. They are exceedingly pleasant to take and are ideal for children. They apparently act directly on the nerves and muscles of the bowels, having, it would seem, a neutral action on other organs or glands. They do not purge or cause inconvenience.

If they do not positively cure chronic or habitual constipation and thus relieve the myriads of associate or dependent chronic ailments, your money will be refunded. Try Rexall Orderlies at our risk. Three sizes of packages, 10c, 25c., and 50c. Remember, you can obtain Rexall Remedies in this community only at our store. The Rexall Store—The Ivy Drug Store, Frank N. Barber's Poles.

Anciently barbers were surgeons, especially in cases of bleeding. To assist this operation the patient used to grasp a staff or pole, which was always kept near the barber surgeon. To this staff was tied a tape, which was used in bandaging the patient's arm. When not in use the pole was hung outside as a sign of the work performed inside. Later a stick painted to represent the pole was left in the doorway. At first surgeons' poles were painted with red and white stripes, with a brass knob or basin at the end, while mere barbers were required to have them white and blue. This statute was still in force in England in 1297. The last barber-surgeon died in London in 1821.—New York American

"Alias Jimmy Valentine"

JIMMY VALENTINE, WARDEN HANDLER AND ROSE LANE.

CHAPTER XV.
VALENTINE broke the silence. "But to prove so important a matter so suddenly—on a second's notice—why, no man on earth can—Wait. If I happen to have that scrap book here, I brought it down one day, and if—he opened a drawer—here it is. Of course there may be nothing here on the exact date you mention." The fast doubtfully.

VALENTINE SHUFFLED THE PAGES BACK. "1907," Doyle came to him. Valentine shuffled the pages back. "Well, that's pretty close—that's in March, 1906. I made a speech that night. What was that date again?" "Well, by—," began Doyle, completely unphased.

"That was a pretty good speech," commented Valentine, pointing to another clipping—"second—one—I ever made. The first, what was that date—February what?"

"Ninth," Doyle rose impatiently. "This is too good," put in Valentine. "Here, look here." He indicated the picture on the wall. "Who is that as big as life there? It's been staring us both in the face ever since you've been here."

Doyle went to the photograph. "That was on Feb. 9, 1906—why, yes, the photographer even dated it."

"Is this you?" Doyle pointed to one of the figures in the group.

"Well, look at it. If this Valentine was in prison that must be me. You said yourself that Slag Slag doesn't allow boarders to go visiting."

Doyle stepped back in front of Valentine's desk.

"You can alibi yourself into hell, Valentine, but you can't get away from that scar on your left wrist."

looked method of identification? Do you know that since the introduction of a horseshair in sewing wounds there is never a scar?" He smiled irritatingly at Doyle.

As a reply the detective bent swiftly across the desk, seized Valentine's arm and drew his left hand toward him.

"Could an old scar be opened and sewed with horseshair and disappear?" he asked dazedly as he saw the wrist was unmarked by any indication of a scar.

"I don't know; I presume so," indifferently.

Doyle was silent. This last denouncement disconcerted him more than had anything else. An idea came to him.

He lunged forward, clutching Valentine's right hand in his own, and jerked it across the desk. "Was it the left wrist that was scarred?" he cried.

He pushed back the cuff, but the surface of the right wrist was as smooth and as unbroken as the other.

"Anything else I can do for you?" asked the assistant cashier calmly as Doyle let go his hand.

"By—, that's funny," murmured Doyle. He looked across the room to the picture on the wall. He drew a magnifying glass from his coat pocket and stepped before the handsomely framed photograph once more.

He passed the lens up and down and across, over the face of the photograph, then wheeled about and faced Jimmy Valentine.

"Mr. Randall," he said apologetically, "you must excuse my mistake—I trust that you will overlook my ungentlemanly manners. I now realize that I have been making insinuations against an entirely innocent man. You of course realize the difficulties of my profession—how, in dealing with the brightest criminal brains in the world, we cannot avoid making errors at times, but—"

"I will say in justice to myself that this is the first mistake of the kind I have ever made."

"Quite true—quite true, I am sure, my dear sir," commented Jimmy Valentine condescendingly. "I can see that you are exceptionally able in your line. Some day if I ever have a loss here through thievery I shall be most glad to recommend you to the directors, and I am sorry that you feel so embarrassed at your error regarding me."

"Oh, cut that! Don't worry about me," said Doyle vigorously. "Wait till I put the bracelets on the real Jimmy Valentine, then save your sympathy for him. He'll pay for this day's work. It's all through him that I made a sucker out of myself today, Mr. Randall, and when I get him he's going to 'come through,' which means confess."

Doyle paused for breath and concluded, "I'm on the biggest job of my whole career, and when I finish it I'll have the real Jimmy Valentine sewed up in a little stone jug by 8, without light or fresh air, and what he'll get to eat would make a pit bull terrier turn vegetarian."

Valentine in spite of the danger that attended his situation could not resist the temptation to continue the conversation with Doyle. It was dangerous—no doubt as to that. At any moment the young man might let drop a word or a hint that would betray himself into his enemy's hands by confirming the detective's suspicions.

But the daring Valentine relished the spice of excitement in the situation. He played with the detective as a cat with a squeaking mouse.

"To be sure, you do not promise this man Jimmy Valentine a very merry time of it when you finally land him," Valentine said. "I am glad I am not he."

Doyle laughed grimly.

"The resemblance is the most startling I have ever encountered," he answered. "You are perhaps a trifle taller—a half inch, maybe—but, aside from that and the wrist scar, you and Valentine are exact."

Valentine smiled fatuously—quite intentionally so.

"I should hate to have so clever a man as you hunting me, Mr. Doyle," he went on, "and from what you say I assume you have been after him some time."

"Nearly three years," the detective granted angrily.

"Well, that's quite awhile. You must want him badly."

Doyle bent toward the other and pounded his fist into his opened palm.

"He is the one man who can open a safe by the sense of touch," he explained.

Blank amazement came into the face of the assistant cashier.

"Why, that's not possible, is it?" he asked incredulously.

"Doesn't sound so—we never thought so—but Jimmy Valentine has done it repeatedly. The first year he worked we thought the jobs were done from the inside—employees or others of the bank. Then we got him by a confession of his pal, and a food governor partitioned him." Doyle growled disgustedly.

"Well, if he was pardoned—"

The detective brushed the suggestion aside.

"I want him for another job, one that I can convict him on now and couldn't before the first conviction."

"You will doubtless get him, Mr. Doyle," confidently.

"Doubtless—it's a life work to land him. He's the most dangerous man loose."

"It doesn't seem possible that a man could have so delicate a sense of touch," said Valentine innocently, continuing to "play" Doyle as an angler plays a brook trout.

"He has," with an angry snort. "It's been the ambition of my life to see him work—to catch him red handed."

"Well, for the sake of the community at large I hope you do. By the way, Mr. Doyle, as you have never seen this—or—Mr. Valentine work, how do you know that he uses nothing but his hands in opening safes?"

"Oh, we have a general idea about his system. He keeps his hands tender, soft, sensitive, and through a fairly extensive amount of experience he is able to detect the movement of the tumblers that lock the safe as he turns the dials of the combination. This much we learned from one Red Flanagan, alias Tim Croun, alias the 'White Rat,' the pal that Valentine took up with after he killed another pal named Cotton. Flanagan's right name is Jim. He did a bit at Joliet, and I think I'll be able to get him to testify against Valentine when I get him sewed up in Boston. What? Oh, yes; Red was always known as the 'White Rat' until he took to dyeling his hair vermilion."

Doyle looked at his watch. He nodded a farewell to Valentine and wheeled toward the door. He stopped momentarily and asked permission to "take another flash at that picture on the wall." Valentine gave his assent and watched the detective curiously.

Doyle stepped in front of the photograph, took out his magnifying glass, a powerful reading glass, and again made a minute examination of the scene in the banquet hall, with "Mr. Lee Randall" sitting at the right of the toastmaster.

He turned, shot a searching look at Valentine and then drew close to the latter's desk.

"By the way," he said, "on my way out I'll stop and explain to the—"

"Mr. Lane, the president," reminded Valentine.

"Yes. I want to apologize for making accusations against you. Good day, Mr. Randall."

"Good day, Mr. Doyle."

Doyle stepped out into the hallway. As he drew the door toward him to close it he leaned forward and peered through the crack. He saw Valentine standing at his desk, and he also saw the young man's breast heave as though he was sighing in relief as at the ending of a trying ordeal.

Just as he was about to close the door and depart the door leading from the vault room into the assistant cashier's office burst violently open. Doyle heard the crash, and he also heard what followed it—a frenzied voice, an agonized voice, crying "Jimmy, Jimmy!"

"Jimmy?" Then that's his name, after all; it's Valentine! gasped the detective, pushing the door open to better learn what was transpiring.

The voice was the voice of Red Flanagan, who, followed by little Bobby Lane, had rushed frantically into the room.

"Jimmy!" screamed Red, his eyes bulging upward in horror. "Bobby's—"

Adopted at a regular meeting of the Council, October 17, 1911, by the following aye and nay vote:

Ayes, Swinton, Glassford, Nordrum, Rachow, Geiken and Webster.

Nays, none.
Alderman Glassford moved the adoption of the following resolution which was seconded by Alderman Nordrum:

Resolved, by the common council of the city of Charlevoix, That the roll of the special assessment for the purpose of determining that part of the cost which the council decided should be paid and borne by special assessment for the purpose of grading and paving, with concrete pavement of Michigan avenue from the north line of Pine River north to the north line extended of Dixon avenue, forty-four feet in width, including the necessary curbing, gutters, crosswalks, sewerages and approaches, be amended so that Michigan avenue from the north line of Dixon avenue to the east line of Neech street, thence south on Neech street to the south line of Dixon avenue, extended, running through Lindsay Park addition, thence east on Dixon avenue, running through Lindsay Park addition to the east line of Mercer boulevard, thence south on Mercer boulevard, thence south on Chicago avenue, thence east on Chicago avenue to the right of way of the Pere Marquette railroad, thirty-one feet in width, including the necessary curbing, gutters, crosswalks, sewerages and approaches, which was reported to the common council by the Board of Assessors on the 15th day of September, 1911, be and the same is hereby continued as reported.

Resolved further, That the amount of said special assessment be and the same be hereby divided into five equal installments, the first installment to be collected on or before 90 days from the confirmation of the said special assessment roll, and the balance of the installments to be collected, one each year at the time fixed by law for the collection of the city taxes, together with the annual interest at the rate of six per centum upon all unpaid installments.

Resolved further, That the city clerk shall report to the city assessor a description of said lots and premises as contained in said special assessment roll, with the amount of the assessment levied upon each, and the name of the owner or tenant against whom the assessment was made, and direct said assessors to levy the several sums so assessed as a tax upon the several lots and premises to which they were assessed, respectively, and to collect, however, that the first installment of said assessment shall be collected directly from the said special assessment roll, and in accordance with the provisions of Act No. 235, 1895, as amended, "An Act to provide for the incorporation of cities of the fourth class."

Resolved further, That the city of Charlevoix shall borrow the sum of seventeen thousand seven hundred and thirteen and 8/10 dollars, to be repaid in installments of the receipts from said special assessment, for the purpose of defraying the cost of said improvement, for which said assessment was levied, and that the bonds of said city be issued therefor, to draw interest at the rate of not exceeding five per centum payable annually on the 15th day of October of each year, and the Mayor and City Clerk be and they are hereby directed and empowered to issue said bonds, pledging the full faith and credit of said city, for the payment of said issue.

Resolved further, That the depreciation of said bonds shall be as follows: fifteen of said bonds shall be for one thousand dollars each and five of said bonds shall be for five hundred dollars each, and five hundred dollars each, three of said one thousand dollar bonds and one of said five hundred dollar bonds and one of said five hundred dollar bonds shall be paid each year, commencing the 15th day of October 1912, all of which, then in accordance with the provisions of Act No. 235, 1895, as amended, "An Act to provide for the incorporation of cities of the fourth class."

Provided further, That any party against whom said assessment is made shall have the option of paying the whole of said assessment, at any time, in full, with the proportionate interest thereon, after said assessment shall have been confirmed.

Adopted the 15th day of October, A. D. 1911.
Ernest J. Miller, Mayor

WOULD CUT VACATION
Superintendent of Public Instruction Would Have Continual Schools.

Luther L. Wright of Ironwood, State Superintendent of Public Instruction, has come out in favor of abolishing the long summer vacation and keeping the schools in session twelve months in the year.

His announcement created a sensation among the hundreds of teachers to whom it was addressed at the annual convention of the Upper Peninsula Educational Association at Houghton, and it is likely to arouse discussion among educators in all parts of the country.

Taking for granted that bright, ambitious boys nowadays ought to complete a college course after leaving the high school, Mr. Wright declared that the average young man is twenty-four before he begins his life work. Usually he goes to work at a small salary and he is thirty before he is in a position to marry.

"People nowadays waste time where their grandfathers didn't," said Mr. Wright. "School vacations came about for two reasons. The old-time church schools had them during the holidays and feasts of the church, and the farmers had them during the summer season so the children could work in the fields. We follow the custom for no other reason than that our forefathers did."

"I am coming to the idea that there ought to be no long vacation, that it is a damage to children instead of a help, that it tends to destroy habits of industry, habits of application and habits of discipline and that school teaching would be easier and more efficient if it were abolished."

GROWING ALFALFA
Quintan Company of Petoskey Will Have 200 Acres.

Through an error last week the Journal stated that the Quintan company of Petoskey had planted eight acres to alfalfa during the past season. It should have read 80 acres. This company now has 100 acres of alfalfa growing and are so pleased with the results that they have a number of teams at work getting another 100 acres in shape for seeding next spring. Alfalfa does well on Emmet county lands and when its value is fully learned the cheap, wild lands hereabouts will go like hot cakes. Another indication of the progressiveness of our farmers is the fact that over 200 silos have been put up in this county this year. Pellston Journal.

RAISING BIG HORSES.

Youngsters Need Grass Feed to Keep Them Growing.

We are now upon a most trying period of the year for horses, and especially young horses, writes L. Ogilvy in the Breeder's Gazette. The succulence of the grass will soon have departed, and much of it will in a short time have passed its most nutritious stage and become tough and wiry. I do not believe that the British way of handling drafters, placing a great deal of dependence upon grass with added feed, is suited to the corn states. The continental method will probably prove much better, as it is based on a climate much more similar to our own.

The British pasture is kept fresh by the humid atmosphere and constant showers, while on the continent drought, as with us, is the prevailing condition in the summer months. While grass is desirable, it will not take the place of green feed, and an effort should be made at all times to have this on hand for the young horses.

Probably with us alfalfa is the best standly, and when quite freshly cured and hauled from the cock it is probably as good as quite green. It is a cut-and-come-again crop and can be depended upon throughout the season. Vetches are good if only it will be remembered that after they form seed they are not cooling, but, like all henns, extremely heating. A little green cut oats, barley or wheat is desirable for a change, and I like either wheat or oat heads for horses at any time with the straw cut off to save waste. They must eat these slowly, and the thorough mastication causes them to be well assimilated and healthful.

Up to having fine horses will relish clean fresh cut grass very much, and the same is true of afterwards, so that between one thing and another we have a great variety of feed growing on the farm for them if only we will make use of it. Later on green corn is all about in abundance. I have never seen any but beneficial effects from its use, although I have heard objections made to it as dangerous. For that matter, I have heard everything except dry hay and oats objected to as horse feed, and I have seen as many horses die on these as on anything else. When the corn is all gone there is still the blue grass. Some of it should be saved, so that when winter comes it is in good shape for the season when we must depend on dry feed, supplemented only by flaxseed, bran mashes and roots.

A continuous growth is what is necessary. Seasons of stagnation and setbacks all defeat the growing of a big horse. One should not make haste too fast, but keep at it with a cool but strong diet, if he wants big boned market toppers.

Sore on Them.

He—I feel, darling, that I am not half good enough to be your husband, but—

She—But what, George?

He—I'm a darn sight too good to be the soul-mate of your grouchy parents.

they are not cooling, but, like all henns, extremely heating. A little green cut oats, barley or wheat is desirable for a change, and I like either wheat or oat heads for horses at any time with the straw cut off to save waste. They must eat these slowly, and the thorough mastication causes them to be well assimilated and healthful.

Up to having fine horses will relish clean fresh cut grass very much, and the same is true of afterwards, so that between one thing and another we have a great variety of feed growing on the farm for them if only we will make use of it. Later on green corn is all about in abundance. I have never seen any but beneficial effects from its use, although I have heard objections made to it as dangerous. For that matter, I have heard everything except dry hay and oats objected to as horse feed, and I have seen as many horses die on these as on anything else. When the corn is all gone there is still the blue grass. Some of it should be saved, so that when winter comes it is in good shape for the season when we must depend on dry feed, supplemented only by flaxseed, bran mashes and roots.

A continuous growth is what is necessary. Seasons of stagnation and setbacks all defeat the growing of a big horse. One should not make haste too fast, but keep at it with a cool but strong diet, if he wants big boned market toppers.

THE SALOON AND CHILDHOOD

The Saloon Robs the Children of their Rightful Heritage.

If the American Republic is to continue to advance, to attain to higher place among the peoples of the earth, or even to hold its present high estate, its children must be better born than they now are, better born than the children of other peoples.

By "better born" I do not refer to wealth or rank or position at birth. To the really well-born, wealth, rank and position are all the subject of attainment. By "better born" I mean more efficiently born. To be well born is to be born with a heritage of efficiency—a sound body, a well developed brain, a nervous system of strength and fiber calculated to meet the strain and the stress of the twentieth century environment amid which the child, if it survive, will have to struggle.

I hold a heritage of high efficiency to be a part of the birthright of every American child; that, given this heritage, the child is entitled as further part of its birthright to at least a few happy cloudless years; to parental care, affection and direction; to a regulated home;

Mortgage Sale.

Whereas, default having been made in the conditions of a certain mortgage made and executed on the 14th day of April, A. D. 1902, by Clifford Papineau and Flora Papineau, husband and wife, of Charlevoix, Michigan, to Albert E. Mason of Charlevoix, Michigan, which mortgage was recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds for Charlevoix County, Michigan, on April 16th, A. D. 1902, in Liber 33 of Mortgages, on page 425.

Also default having been made in the conditions of a certain mortgage made and executed on the 25th day of August, A. D. 1909, by Clifford Papineau and Flora Papineau, his wife, of Charlevoix, Michigan, to John Bumiger of Charlevoix, Michigan, which mortgage was recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds for Charlevoix County, Michigan, on September 3rd, 1909, in Liber 27 of Mortgages on page 416, which mortgage was on the 31st day of August, A. D. 1909, assigned by John Bumiger to Albert E. Mason, which assignment of mortgage was recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds for Charlevoix County, Michigan, on September 3rd, A. D. 1909, in Liber 31 of Mortgages, on page 416.

And whereas, the amount claimed to be due and unpaid on both of said mortgages of the date of this notice is the sum of $105.00 principal and interest, (the sum of $105.00 and $2.00 respectively), and further sum of $25.00 for taxes, and $20.00 interest on taxes paid for the mortgage under the terms of the mortgage, and further sum of $75.00 for insurance, and $12.00 interest on insurance paid by the mortgagee under the terms of the mortgage, and on attorney's fee of $30.00 is provided in said mortgages, and whereas, no suit or proceeding at law or in equity has been instituted to recover this debt, secured by said mortgages, or any part thereof.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgages, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgages will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises therein described, at public auction to the highest bidder, at the east front door of the Court House in the City of Charlevoix, County of Charlevoix, and State of Michigan, that being the place where the Circuit Court for said county is held, on the 29th day of December, A. D. 1911, at ten o'clock in the forenoon (standard time). Said premises are described as follows: Lot number twelve of block number thirteen of the original plat of said village of Charlevoix, County of Charlevoix, and State of Michigan.

NOTICE.

Notice is hereby given that the Common Council of the City of Charlevoix, will meet in the Court Room, the City of Charlevoix, on the 23rd day of October, A. D. 1911, at 7 o'clock in the afternoon, to consider the matter of vacating, discontinuing and abolishing all the streets and parts of streets within the corporate limits of said City of Charlevoix, and described as follows: Oak street from the westerly line of lot sixteen, block six, produced southerly to the westerly line of lot sixteen, block twelve, produced southerly, all in Lindsay Park Addition to the City of Charlevoix, and Walnut street from the southerly line of State street to the westerly line of lot eighteen, block thirteen, produced southerly, all in Lindsay Park Addition to the City of Charlevoix, also short street named from the easterly line of Central Avenue to the easterly line of Central Avenue, all in the City of Charlevoix, and Central Avenue from the southerly line of Elm street to the southerly line of State street, all in Lindsay Park Addition to the City of Charlevoix.

The following resolution was adopted by a majority vote as follows:
Resolved, That the Common Council of the City of Charlevoix, do hereby resolve that the streets and parts of streets within the corporate limits of said City of Charlevoix, and described as follows: Oak street from the westerly line of lot sixteen, block six, produced southerly to the westerly line of lot sixteen, block twelve, produced southerly, all in Lindsay Park Addition to the City of Charlevoix, and Walnut street from the southerly line of State street to the westerly line of lot eighteen, block thirteen, produced southerly, all in Lindsay Park Addition to the City of Charlevoix, also short street named from the easterly line of Central Avenue to the easterly line of Central Avenue, all in the City of Charlevoix, and Central Avenue from the southerly line of Elm street to the southerly line of State street, all in Lindsay Park Addition to the City of Charlevoix, be and are hereby vacated, discontinued and abolished, as a necessary public improvement, said streets, being described as follows: Oak street, and the westerly line of lot sixteen, block six, produced southerly to the westerly line of lot sixteen, block twelve, produced southerly, all in Lindsay Park Addition to the City of Charlevoix, and Walnut street from the southerly line of State street to the westerly line of lot eighteen, block thirteen, produced southerly, all in Lindsay Park Addition to the City of Charlevoix, also short street named from the easterly line of Central Avenue to the easterly line of Central Avenue, all in the City of Charlevoix, and Central Avenue from the southerly line of Elm street to the southerly line of State street, all in Lindsay Park Addition to the City of Charlevoix.

Now, therefore, the City of Charlevoix, do hereby resolve that the streets and parts of streets within the corporate limits of said City of Charlevoix, and described as follows: Oak street from the westerly line of lot sixteen, block six, produced southerly to the westerly line of lot sixteen, block twelve, produced southerly, all in Lindsay Park Addition to the City of Charlevoix, and Walnut street from the southerly line of State street to the westerly line of lot eighteen, block thirteen, produced southerly, all in Lindsay Park Addition to the City of Charlevoix, also short street named from the easterly line of Central Avenue to the easterly line of Central Avenue, all in the City of Charlevoix, and Central Avenue from the southerly line of Elm street to the southerly line of State street, all in Lindsay Park Addition to the City of Charlevoix, be and are hereby vacated, discontinued and abolished, as a necessary public improvement, said streets, being described as follows: Oak street, and the westerly line of lot sixteen, block six, produced southerly to the westerly line of lot sixteen, block twelve, produced southerly, all in Lindsay Park Addition to the City of Charlevoix, and Walnut street from the southerly line of State street to the westerly line of lot eighteen, block thirteen, produced southerly, all in Lindsay Park Addition to the City of Charlevoix, also short street named from the easterly line of Central Avenue to the easterly line of Central Avenue, all in the City of Charlevoix, and Central Avenue from the southerly line of Elm street to the southerly line of State street, all in Lindsay Park Addition to the City of Charlevoix.

And it is further resolved, That notices of this meeting, with a copy of this resolution, shall be published for at least two weeks, before the time above mentioned for said meeting, in the Charlevoix Courier, a newspaper published and circulated in the City of Charlevoix.
Witness the 23rd day of September, A. D. 1911.

A LIBERAL OFFER

We Guarantee to Relieve Dyspepsia. If We Fail the Medicine Costs Nothing.

To unquestionably prove to the people that indigestion and dyspepsia can be permanently relieved and that Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets will bring about this result, we will furnish the medicine absolutely free if it fails to give satisfaction to anyone using it.

The remarkable success of Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets is due to the high degree of scientific skill used in devising their formula as well as to the care exercised in their manufacture, whereby the well-known properties of Bismuth-Subnitrate and Pepsin have been combined with Carminatives and other agents.

Bismuth-Subnitrate and Pepsin are constantly employed and recognized by the entire medical profession as invaluable in the treatment of indigestion and dyspepsia.

The Pepsin need in Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets is carefully prepared so as to develop its greatest efficiency. Pepsin supplies to the digestive apparatus one of the most important elements of the digestive fluid. Without it the digestion and assimilation of food are impossible.

The Carminatives possess properties which aid in relieving the disturbances and pain caused by undigested food. This combination of these ingredients makes a remedy invaluable for the complete relief of indigestion and dyspepsia.

We are so certain of this that we urge you to try Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets on our own personal guarantee. Three sizes, 25c, 50c, and $1.00. Remember, you can obtain Rexall Remedies only at our store. The Rexall Store, The Ivy Drug Store, Frank N. Metcalf, Prop., Charlevoix, Michigan.

"The Aster Party."

An Aster Party was given for the children under the auspices of the Parents' Association, in the gymnasium room of the High School building. The room was beautifully decorated with autumn leaves and asters. About one hundred and seventy-five children were present. Aster seeds were given to the children in the spring to plant in their own gardens. The results were very good considering the dry season, and many children brought baskets of asters. A short program was given consisting of the story of the "Aster and the Goldenrod," by Miss Hallie Bang, a vocal solo by Mrs. Davidson, Miss Marguerite Manger recited the poem entitled, "How the Leaves Came Down."

Several songs were sung by the children under the direction of Miss King. Many interesting games were played, after which the children were all seated and the Normal class assisted in serving refreshments, consisting of apples and grapes. Prizes were awarded the children bringing the best bunch of asters. Donald McLean was awarded first prize, Miss Dora Martin from the training room second prize, and Miss Helen Mason third prize. The prizes will be given to the children later. The teachers helped to make the party a success by assisting with the songs and games and a number of parents showed their interest by being present.

locked Kitty in the new vault! We can't get her out!"

Valentine turned on Red like a panther.

"Where is the combination? Quick, man, quick!"

"The builders haven't sent it yet. Nobody knows it," choked Red.

Bobby threw himself into Valentine's arms, sobbing convulsively.

"I didn't mean to do it," he cried hysterically. "I didn't mean to—I didn't know Kitty hid in the vault, and I thought—I didn't know. I pretended not to and shut the door to scare her. Then just in fun I turned the knob!"

"Good God, that baby!" groaned Valentine, wringing his hands and starting toward the vault room.

"You can do it," urged Red. "I'll clear the hawk—just you and me. For God's sake, open that vault or that baby will die like a rat!" Red fell on his knees before Valentine and pleaded heartily for his old time safe breaking accomplice to use once again the skill that had made his name a synonym for success in the underworld.

Valentine hesitated, as well he might, considering the hazardous nature of his position. If any one but Red should see him open the safe—see him at work—all hope of further concealing the nature of his occupation in the past would be destroyed.

And Doyle, who wanted to "see Jimmy Valentine work" was even now in the bank building—might return to Valentine's office at any moment, reasoned the assistant cashier.

"Kitty mustn't die—she mustn't—she mustn't!" sobbed Bobby.

Valentine's face set determinedly. He tore off his coat and, rolling up his sleeves, dashed out into the vault room.

"I know! I'll do it! I'll do it!" he cried.

Detective George Doyle smiledardonically as he softly withdrew from behind the partly opened door which had sheltered him from the view of the frantic actors in the tragedy that had been enacted in the assistant

Literary Notes

The Buying Power of $1.75.

A little money sometimes buys a good deal. For instance, take the subscription price of The Youth's Companion for a year—$1.75. If all the good reading in the 52 weekly issues of the paper were published in book form, according to its kind, it would make about thirty volumes of fiction, science, essays by famous writers, household management and economics, sports and pastimes for boys, natural history, anecdotes, humor, etc. The serial stories alone would fill several volumes. Among these is Ralph Palmer's great story of the Boxer Rebellion in China, "The Cross and the Dragon." Another is by J. W. Schultze, who was adopted by the Blackfeet when a boy. It is called "The Quest for the Fish-Dog Skin." Another is a glorious girls' story by C. A. Stephens, called "Julia Sylvester." It is the story of a "Mercer" girl in the pioneer days of Oregon and Washington—and that is only part of the serials.

It will cost you nothing to send for the beautiful announcement of The Companion for 1912, and we will send with it sample copies of the paper. Do not forget that the new subscriber for 1912 receives a gift of The Companion's Calendar for 1912, lithographed in ten colors and gold, and all the issues for the remaining weeks of 1911 free from the time the subscription is received.

Only $1.75 now, but on January 1, 1912, the price will advance to $2.00.

CHARLEVOIX COURIER

The Leading Newspaper in the Best Little City Anywhere

VOL. 29. NUMBER 43

CHARLEVOIX, MICHIGAN, WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 25, 1911

PRICE $1.50 PER YEAR

OPEN LETTER FROM THE MAYOR

Is the Commission Form of Government a Good Thing

FOR CITIES THE SIZE OF CHARLEVOIX

If a Good Thing Why Not Adopt the Plan.

Three Men Could Govern the City More Economically Than More Officials—Initiative, Referendum and Recall.

I desire, through the columns of the Courier, to lay before the people of Charlevoix the subject of a change in our present form of city government. On the start I desire to say that personally, I believe the commission form of government would be a great improvement upon our present cumbersome plan. In future articles I will endeavor to present some of the arguments in favor of the commission plan, but in this article I shall but briefly bring up the subject, and the people can have it under consideration, for in due time I shall recommend to the council the advisability of submitting to the voters the proposition of its adoption, and later will call a public meeting to discuss the matter pro and con.

I have been mayor long enough to decide, in my own mind, that the present plan of conducting city affairs, can be greatly improved upon. To start, we have a mayor and six aldermen forming the city council; we have a board of public works, consisting of five members; we have a cemetery board of five members; we have a board of health of five members; we have a superintendent of the water and light plant, a sexton and other officials ad infinitum. The mayor and aldermen draw $50 per year salary; the members of the other boards serve without pay, while the superintendent of water and lights and sexton are salaried. Other officials are paid per diem, the chief of police being a necessary adjunct under any form of government.

The mayor is a figure-head. He has no initiative, except to "recommend," but he can force nothing through the council or board of public works, and even his appointments are subject to confirmation by the council.

The six aldermen do the legislating, make the appropriations and pay the bills.

The board of public works have charge of the management of the water and light plant, fixing rates, hiring the employees, buying materials, etc., etc. The council merely pays the bills incurred, bills they have no voice in making. The board of public works also has charge, under direction of the council, of making plans for sewers and constructing of them.

It is a case of "too many cooks spoiling the broth." With such a division of authority and responsibility, there is very apt to be a clash of opinions between the two boards and while the council is supreme, vexatious delays are liable to occur.

I believe that during my term as mayor we have been blessed with as good men on the council and on the board of works as could be found in the city; men who have sincerely tried to do their duty as they saw it. But with a concentration of authority and responsibility into one body, the Dixon avenue sewer would have been constructed months sooner, and the street would not have been in its present disgraceful condition. And with authority vested in fewer hands, the paving of Dixon avenue would now be practically if not entirely completed, and we would not have to face the prospect of having the main thoroughfare to the depot a sea of impassable mud in the coming spring, as it is this present fall. I believe that three commissioners one of whom acted as mayor, could govern the city more economically. And the term of office should be at least three years. I believe in the initiative, or the giving of the people the opportunity to pass legislation they may wish. I believe in the referendum, or the giving of the people a chance to vote on any important matter the commission might think wise to pass. I believe in the recall, or giving to the voters the chance to "recall" from office, any official who is found lacking in any way; or who attempts to do things contrary to the will of the majority of the people.

With these safeguards, I believe that three men as a commission, could run this city much better than it is being run now, or even has been, or ever will be run, under our present system.

I ask the voters to think this matter over, and read up on the commission plan for city government. From time to time I expect to present facts and figures, which, I think, will help to convince you that we can be more wisely, efficiently and economically governed under such a plan, than we are at present.

WILL E. HAMPTON, Mayor.

CHARLEVOIX THE VICTOR

Football Between Charlevoix and East Jordan.

Papineau and Krulik Stars—Will Play Boyne City Saturday.

Our Charlevoix foot ball team played a good game on Saturday with East Jordan, on the new grounds east of the green house.

The men of the East Jordan team were much heavier than our home boys, but as far as quickness was concerned our boys had them beaten by far, which was shown in the score 21 to 0.

The first touch down was made three minutes after the start of the game by Papineau, the goal being missed.

During the second quarter Jim Krulik made a touch down, then the third touch down was made by Will Poot and the final one by Jim Krulik which showed great agility and hard work on his part.

During the middle of the game after the second down, a dispute arose as to its being fairly won, but referee Powers having full knowledge as to the rules and regulations of the game, pointed out to the visiting team that we were in the right. Next Saturday our team will play Boyne City, on the home grounds and as this will be the hardest game of the season the boys need the support of every citizen.

DEATH OF OLD CITIZEN

Stephen A. Racot Passed Away Early Last Sunday Evening.

Sunday evening at six o'clock Stephen A. Racot, passed away at the age of fifty years.

He was born at Sheboygan, Wisconsin, and at the age of 11 years came to Charlevoix, in which place he has lived up to five years ago.

In the year of 1903 he married Sadie McNally of Hayes and besides his wife, he leaves his mother and four brothers, George, Tom, Dan and John and one sister, Mrs. Elsie Geer, all of this city and a sister, Mrs. Hummel of Detroit, who was here to attend the funeral which was held today at ten o'clock at the home of Mr. McNally of Hayes. Father Anastasius Rhode officiating.

NOTICE TO PUBLIC

House owners and owners of all buildings are warned to see that chimneys are cleaned and made absolutely safe. I will make a house to house inspection beginning November 1. The general public should co-operate with this movement as a safe-guard against fire loss. Also the state laws require that an inspection be made, and if property owners do not comply with this request, action will be taken against them.

H. D. MARSHALL,
Fire Warden.

THE TIME IS DRAWING NEAR

So in Order to Come Out Ahead in this Fight You Must Keep Right on Working for there is Some Hard Work being Done at this Time to Secure the $15.00

The time for the next count is fast approaching and with it interest in the result is growing daily more keen with friendly rivalry among the contestants. The remaining days will witness an active campaign for more votes. New subscriptions are coming in and the merchants are having wide and active demand for the merchant's coupons.

If you are not a subscriber for the Courier now is the time to start, or if you owe now is the time to pay.

Fifteen dollars in gold is worth considerable effort and then energy put forth to secure this lands the winner that much nearer success in the finish when the piano will be awarded. There is nothing worth while obtained in this world without energetic and thoughtful effort and to become victor in this contest and to receive the reward that goes with it is certainly worth while. If your efforts heretofore have been spasmodic, from now on make them continuous and determined. Enlist the men as well as the women folks in your behalf. The will enjoy the Courier and will be glad to help you along to victory. Speak to your friends and neighbors and see how quickly they will respond. One of the beauties of this contest is that none are disappointed; there are several prizes. It is a time when you ask your friends to show their friendship in a substantial way by assisting you.

The count on November 17 will be decisive as to the $15, but its importance must not be overlooked for your standing on that occasion is a sort of barometer to your following of friends, and if you win it will be the result of the efforts of yourself and friends.

The Courier has the laudable ambition to improve right along and go regularly into every home in Charlevoix and vicinity; to stand for and promote those things which will be for the good of the community and to wield as great influence as possible for the upbuilding of the town and surrounding country.

The following bonuses we are now offering:

For every seven new yearly subscriptions, $8.00 extra, a total of 14.00.

For every seven renewal subscriptions, 6.00 extra, a total of $14.00.

For every seven back subscriptions, 6.00 extra, a total of $8.00.

For every forty merchants' coupons, 50 extra, a total of 1.50.

These coupons may be collected from any and all merchants who are in the contest.

Remember the $15 in gold goes to the one who makes the greatest gain in number of votes.

Others were nominated but as yet have received no votes. These young ladies by no means should be considered out of the running as all have been doing some work and they will make the contest interesting for those who already have a good start.

Remember that many of our leading merchants are interested in this contest and give 25-cents with every dollar purchase. Also, those who do not fully understand the rules and regulations of this contest can call at this office or write us and we will be pleased to go over the proposition with them. The following merchants are giving coupons:

CHICKEN PIE SUPPER

Given by the C. H. S. A. A. on Saturday October 28.

Now is the time for chicken pie supper and everybody should turn out Saturday.

After a good game of football nothing is better than a good feed, especially when it is served by a class of good looking girls such as the seniors of the High School.

After the supper a dance will be given, music by the Davison orchestra and everyone should give the association their support by attending both these functions.
